

Reversing 31st Street plans now could put city in financial muddle

No parking

Councilwoman Reba McClanan took advantage of the opportunity — City Council was reviewing budgets for a safe community at a budget workshop — to bring up parking at the judicial center.

She said that she went to the center to serve on a grand jury and was told that she would have a parking space. "I couldn't find a place," she said.

Neither could a lot of other people whose destination was the judicial center.

"You have no idea how angry they were," said McClanan. "If they hadn't committed a crime, they might."

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that one of the city's hopes had been that the problem would be resolved when the center was placed where it was at the end of the municipal center.

City Council Reporter

So far 30,000 people have signed petitions saying they would rather have a park at 31st Street instead of the hotel, smaller park and parking garage envisioned by the city.

That's a lot of people, even in a city of 400,000, and that's a lot of voters to consider during an election year.

The petition signers want an advisory referendum, but it's no longer a case of the citizens and City Council.

A third party is in the picture, the 31st Street L.C., the private developer with whom the city has a contract. Another partner to the contract is the Virginia Beach Development Authority, which actually owns 1.46 acres of the property which it purchased for $3.5 million in the late 80s.

To round out the 3.53 acres that comprise the site, add 31 acre from the addition of stub streets — the northern half of 30th Street and 31st Street east of Atlantic Avenue, and 1.76 acre block on the west side of Atlantic Avenue bounded on the north and south by 31st and 30th Streets and on the west by Pacific Avenue.

The city can pull out of the contract, but not without grave consequences.

In a letter directed to Mayor Meyera Oberndorf and members of the City Council last month, City Attorney Leslie Lilley says that the development

Appeal for FAA noise abatement funds pulled

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Why couldn't some of the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) funds appropriated by Congress for mitigation of noise from aircraft operations at commercial airports be used for the same purpose at military airports like Oceana in Virginia Beach, Fentress in Chesapeake and Chambers Field in Norfolk?

When a resolution to that effect was considered Tuesday, no one, including the Citizens Concerned about Jet Noise (CCAJN) who had made the original request, thought it was a good idea.

It wouldn't happen and it was not a practical move in the city's efforts to keep the jet noise down, they said.

Accordingly, Mayor Meyera Oberndorf withdrew the resolution.

Cmdr. William C. "Skip" Zobel, commanding officer at the Naval Air Station Oceana, did inform City Council at a work session Tuesday, that the Department of Defense has approved a joint land use study by the Navy with the cities of Virginia Beach, Norfolk and Chesapeake, which should make it easier for the people moving into the cities to be more informed about jet noise.

Virginia Beach is the only city where the realtors have a noise disclosure policy but compliance is voluntary.

The city's love/hate relationship with the Navy — they love the economy boost and the people it brings here and they hate the noise — has made for confusing times. Keeping the planes here, but cutting down on the noise is the dilemma and the Navy, the residents and the city have made various overtures to solving the problem.

THROUGH THE RANKS. Twenty-eight-year veteran Alfred "Jake" Jacobs Jr. has served as acting chief of police since August. He was tapped to lead the Virginia Beach department, and his appointment ceremony was held Thursday.

New police chief outlines goals for dept.

By Victoria Hecht

Alfred M. "Jake" Jacobs Jr. has been Virginia Beach's acting police chief since August, but he's still settling into his new digs at Police Headquarters.

Following an exhaustive nationwide search, "acting" has been removed from the title.

Like his office, whose walls don't yet show the marks of tenure with certificates and plaques, Jacobs' slate as new police chief is ready for his imprint.

Jacobs intends to make his mark. The 28-year veteran of the Virginia Beach Police Department rose through its ranks, the first home-grown officer to be appointed chief since 1969.

Jacobs joined the department as a civilian desk officer at age 19 while pursuing an associate's degree in police science at Tidewater Community College.

"I saw it (the job) as a way not only to get my foot in the door, but also to help pay my way through college," he said.

Jacobs first became attracted to law enforcement while a teen growing up in Norfolk. An officer who worked his neighborhood always took time out for youngsters.

"He was friendly as opposed to just driving by," he remembered.

At the time, Norfolk had a summer cadet program for rising high school seniors which paid $1.25 an hour. Students could work for the department in rotating units — traffic, paddy wagon, detective bureau, records.

"That experience pretty much cemented it in my mind that this is what I wanted to do," Jacobs said. "So here I am."

Working with command staff, he has outlined several goals while leading the department of 734 sworn officers.

Community policing will continue to grow under Jacobs' tenure.

"Probably what we're giving the most attention to now is transitioning

Beverage King crowned King Neptune

Lawrence Sutton to reign over 27th annual Beach celebration

By Jeannette Priest

All hail King Neptune!

Lawrence L. Sutton, Virginia Beach King Neptune XXVII, benevolently encouraged his "subjects" to enjoy a Mardi-Gras-like party at the elegant Cavalier on the Hill Sunday afternoon.

Within the shimmering red and gold recesses of a staged sultan's tent, King Lawrence spoke Neptune Festival 2000 into existence.

"Let the festival begin," Sutton proclaimed.

About 250 area dignitaries and supporters of the annual Neptune Festival enjoyed the gala celebration. The newly-crowned king and his Royal Court of tritons, princesses, attendants and pages were introduced. They will serve at many social functions during the year.

The festival draws hundreds of thousands of participants each year, generating more than $15 million in economic impact for the city of Virginia Beach. It is rated in the top 100 festivals in the nation and was named to the top 10 festivals on the East Coast in 1999.

"Neptune's Magic Carpet" is the theme of this year's gala festival. Flying carpets carried the revelers for flight became centerpieces on tables, with airy flowers perched on them. An opulent and decadent ambience set the mood of the event. Centered in the ballroom, a towering and bountiful, serpentine table was laden with food.

Sutton is president of Hoffman Beverage Company and vice president of Hoffman Properties. Additionally, he is president of S&R Transport Company. He and wife Carolyn have been married 43 years.

"We are really 'people' persons," she said.

The new king is active in many community and civic organizations, such as Virginia Beach Crime Solvers.

SHOW YOUR REGIONAL PRIDE

OpSail 2000: Reason to smile

Hampton Roads has big reason to celebrate its maritime roots when OpSail 2000, the world's largest tall ship event, comes sailing into our harbor June 16-20.

Not only is it reason to be regionally proud, but internationally proud. OpSail will advance Hampton Roads' support of brotherhood among nations as we welcome seafarers from around the world to our ports and into our homes.

Some 150 tall ships, character vessels and military craft from nearly 20 nations will celebrate with us for five days of waterfront festivals, attractions and special events. The third official port of call on OpSail's millennium voyage, Hampton Roads is just one of eight locations the flotilla will visit as it travels up the East Coast from Puerto Rico to the New York Harbor for this country's 224th birthday celebration.

OpSail 2000 should be an economic boon to the region as well, attracting an estimated 2 to 3 million visitors and generating $20 million for the local economy.

The world is coming — and Hampton Roads must welcome it with open arms. Now is the time to put regional differences aside and embrace the opportunities OpSail 2000 will bring.

To that end the Hampton Roads Mayors and Chairs Caucus has passed a formal resolution endorsing OpSail 2000. The resolution reads:

Whereas, Operation Sail has established a great tradition of celebrating major events in United States maritime history, with a gathering of the world's tall ships and will continue this tradition in an event called OpSail 2000, in celebration of the 224th birthday of the United States of America, and to welcome the new millennium, and

Whereas, OpSail 2000 promises to be the largest gathering in history of tall ships and other majestic vessels like those that have sailed the ocean for centuries, and

Whereas, Hampton Roads, Virginia, because of its respected worldwide reputation among governments and foundations operating tall ships, will be one of the official OpSail 2000 ports of call, and

Whereas, OpSail 2000 Hampton Roads is embracing and involving all regional localities in the planning, programming and execution of this magnificent millennium event, and

Whereas, the Hampton Roads Mayors and Chairs Caucus recognizes OpSail's advancement of brotherhood among nations, and the unique opportunity for the region to welcome to our shores and in our homes seafarers young and old from throughout the world,

Now, therefore, be it resolved, by the Hampton Roads Mayors and Chairs Caucus:

That the Hampton Roads Mayors and Chairs Caucus does hereby pledge support of OpSail 2000 Hampton Roads, and encourages all citizens of the region and state to join in the international camaraderie that it will foster, and further

That this resolution shall be in effect from and after the date of its adoption.

Hampton Roads residents can make OpSail 2000 a success — and have a great time in the process — by supporting this landmark event.

Let's make OpSail worth a salute. — V.E.H.

"Councilwatcher Burns" says questions remain unanswered

Editor:

In reference to "Cosgrove sets record straight" (March 31 issue), Councilman John Cosgrove has offered no proof that anything I said was a lie. Nor has the good Republican Dr. Alan Krasnoff that I was contemptible — meaning despicable, mean, vile, worthless, dishonorable, disgraceful, etc.

Again, I say that the Chesapeake City Council has never made a full disclosure audit on water, sewer and road bonds — meaning names, addresses of persons receiving money right away, costs, how much, maps, charts etc.

Citizens have been pointing this out for years.

Thanks for 'setting the record straight'

Editor:

Just a note to publicly thank Ms. Gordon for setting the record straight with regard to the ethical and outstanding leadership of Mayor William E. Ward. Our city and our children are indeed fortunate to have such a capable hand on the reins. I don't doubt for a minute that his coming re-election will show that all the unfounded smears in the world can't stop the citizens of Chesapeake from knowing a great public servant when they hear one.

Keeping faith with the founding fathers

Those citizens of Virginia Beach who claim that injecting the political party machines into local election

Perspectives

By Eileen Huey,
columnist

only increase corruption and negative partisanship have a point. Under our current political system it would do just that. We certainly don't need to make a bad situation worse. But suppose we had a different system altogether? If our political parties served only as the organizing and nominating apparatus for candidate-selection, and not as campaign funding machines, their positive contribution to the process of free and open elections would be immeasurable.

It is well understood (even by supporters of the current corrupt campaign system) that only money has a voice in American politics. It is dollars, not citizens, that decide the outcome of our elections. But solving the campaign funding problem is the easy part. It would do no good unless the nominating process itself was reformed at the same time.

Let's suppose that every locality collected a mandatory $2 annual tax from every resident of voting age in its jurisdiction. That would easily provide sufficient funds to finance the general election campaigns of our local races on a bi-annual basis, especially if we require local TV and radio stations to provide access to free airtime.

Such public financing would eliminate the need for fund raisers and end the corrupt practice of individuals, corporations, unions, special interest groups and political action committees buying undue influence over our public officials. It also removes the obvious advantage wealthy individuals have over middle and lower income citizens when it comes to serving in public office.

No American citizen has the right to shirk his or her duty to insure we have free and open elections, which are the life-blood of our self-government. Those who don't vote harm no one but themselves. They foolishly cede to others the right to make decisions that directly impact their lives. However, not voting does not give anyone the right to shirk their civic duty to make certain our elections are free from corruption. And there is no citizen so impoverished that $2 a year is going to bankrupt them. Freedom is not free — it requires the shared sacrifice, both of time and money, of all the citizens for it to endure.

No American citizen has the right to shirk his or her duty to insure we have free and open elections, which are the life-blood of our self-government.

But, like I said, cleaning up the financing of the campaigns is only half the battle. We need an entirely new system for nominating candidates if we the people are going to have a say in the process. In the first place, Virginia's system of holding elections every six months is ridiculous. That only guarantees that voter turnout will be as low as possible instead of the reverse.

Let's imagine that every two years all certified political parties would hold a primary election on the Saturday after Labor Day. To be certified, every party desirous of fielding candidates in the general election would have to file a petition which contained a sufficient number of voters willing to register as members of their party for that primary election cycle.

Those parties who certify would be required to nominate a minimum of two candidates for each office, or be banned from running candidates for any office in the fall. That would end the growing totalitarian practice on one-candidate races that characterized nearly 80 percent of our election ballots. Even better, it would mean that incumbents would always have to face a primary challenge, decreasing their tendency to be less and less accountable to the people they represent.

Independents would be allowed to vote in any of the parties' primaries, but could not run for office on their own. Anybody who wanted to run on a platform different than those of the established parties would be expected to form his or her own party to compete in the electoral process.

The advantages of such a system on the local level is that politics would again be about people and not dollars. The national parties would be expected to re-certify every election cycle just like any locally-formed party, so the playing field would be at last be level for all political voices. Of course, we would need to set the number of members high enough to be sure all certified parties are viable but low enough to allow insurgent parties the right to genuinely compete.

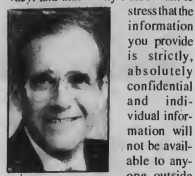

As for running for the two (or more) primary nominations within the political party, those campaigns should be privately funded, but with strict disclosure requirements, contribution limits and expenditure caps. No advantage should be given to any contender merely because of his or her personal wealth or big-money backers.

We should remember that the federal government stepped in to insure that the Teamster Union elections were free and open. How much more should our city governments have the right to insure that our public elections are the same?

Call me a dreamer, if you like, but, after all, our self-government itself was but a dream in the hearts of our founders. As an American, I proudly share the dream of those giants who dared to propose the greatest political experiment ever launched in human history.

Census isn't safe with this poster boy

While speaking of the census, President Bill Clinton said, "I know Americans are concerned about their privacy, and that's why I also want to stress that the information you provide is strictly, absolutely confidential and individual information will not be available to anyone outside the Census Bureau for any reason."

The Real World

By B.J. Sessions,
senior columnist

Now this is a man who lied under oath to a court, the American people, even his wife and daughter and has constantly lied about anything he thought he could get away with — and he is going to assure me that the Census information will be "absolutely confidential?"

I thought the FBI files were "absolutely confidential" until it was disclosed that hundreds of files were sent to the White House for Bill and Hillary to peruse. What's to keep them from getting their hands on the census?

The Census Bureau could have picked anybody to be their poster boy other than Bill Clinton to assure the American people about the security of the census files. No files are safe as the Clintons remain in the White House. If the Census Bureau wants to know how much money I make, I don't mind telling them that it's damned little after the IRS takes their share.

I know I work approximately five months a year for Uncle Sam before I bring home any money of my own to pay my local and state taxes, leaving me very little to live on. It won't be long before the government will take it all and give us back what they think we need.

I don't blame the census people. They are just doing their job; but a lot of Americans are upset over the personal questions. My education and insurance is certainly not any of the Census Bureau's business, and I do not see any reason they need to know. I'm not really as concerned about this year's census as the next one. Those gun nuts in the Congress are trying to come up with some way to find out who owns guns and how many.

What better way to do it than to make it a census question? Fortunately, I received the short form and found the questions reasonable. The only problem I had was under national identity of what to call themselves. In my case, I only had one option and that was white. So I wrote in "White American."

George W. Bush said that if he receives the long form he was not sure that he would fill it out. Good for him. He will be a truthful president.

Welcome to the real world.

All your questions answered about stormwater management

Stormwater management has been the subject of much discussion. An active 1999 hurricane season, which brought Hurricanes Dennis, Floyd and Irene and other storms in rapid succession, has posed challenges to the stormwater system that services Virginia Beach.

The Mayor's Report

Mayor Meyera Oberdorf

If you experienced flooding, you may have a number of questions. What causes certain areas to flood? What happens to stormwater run-off? How does the city manage storm water? What does the storm water management fee cover? Here is some important information provided by the Department of Public Works, Stormwater Management Service, to help you understand where stormwater goes.

Stormwater management helps to minimize flooding and improve water quality through the construction, maintenance and monitoring of storm water systems. It consists of a combination of man-made pipe, canal, pond/lake, and natural channel systems. Due to the fact that Virginia Beach is relatively flat in topography and low in elevation, the efficiency at which the drainage system can function is dependent to a large extent on the tidal influence.

Typically during the spring, south-west winds generate a wind tide which pushes water into the upper reaches of the North Landing River and Back Bay watersheds. During the winter, Nor'easters generate tides which push water up into the watersheds of the Lynnhaven River, Little Creek Cove and Owls Creek.

Hurricane Dennis brought three to five inches of rainfall to our area between Aug. 30 and Sept. 5, saturating Virginia Beach and setting up the potential for flooding. On Sept. 10, an additional three to five inches of rain fell within a one-hour time-frame. Following this storm, Floyd struck the area on Sept. 16 adding two to four inches of rain. Although Floyd produced tidal flooding, the city was spared the volumes of rainfall experienced by other parts of the state.

More recently, Irene deposited five to seven inches of rainfall in the Tide-water area. Based on historical data, the likelihood of these storms occurring as they did is once in 100 years.

When rainfall of this magnitude occurs, the basins and other normal storage areas that accommodate stormwater run-off fill up and the stormwater system is over-stressed.

As the city has grown and developed over the past 36 years, drainage design standards have changed. Typically, Virginia Beach neighborhoods were developed using the following criteria:

- Neighborhoods developed prior to 1970 have drainage systems that can handle a storm of such duration and rainfall intensity that it is likely to occur every two years.

- Neighborhoods developed after 1970 have drainage systems that can handle a storm of such duration and rainfall intensity that it is likely to occur once every 10 years.

Stormwater management helps to minimize flooding and improve water quality through the construction, maintenance and monitoring of storm water systems.

- Drainage systems which serve watersheds greater than 300 acres are sized to accommodate a storm of such duration and intensity that it is likely to occur once every 25 years.

- Watersheds greater than 500 acres have a drainage system sized for a storm of such duration and intensity that it is likely to occur once every 50 years.

The city did experience flooding, however, with the exception of certain areas. Our storm water management system responded and provided relief. As part of the Stormwater/Capital Improvement program, the city has improved stormwater management infrastructure. Projects such as the Princess Anne Plaza, Phase II, Parts I and II have provided relief to the Princess Anne Plaza area.

In addition, we have 15 stormwater Capital Improvement projects in various stages of design and property acquisition, including the project to alleviate flooding in the North Beach/Atlantic Avenue areas. Improvements to the Lake Placid drainage system are also scheduled this year. Some other areas, such as the subdivisions and roadways that lie within West Neck Creek watershed and flood plain, require more difficult and costly solutions. They are being evaluated and corrective action will be taken as quickly as possible.

Since sediment and debris can collect in our stormwater systems and impede the flow of water, it is important to maintain our existing systems. Examples of maintenance are:

- Repairing storm drains caves-ins.

- Removing sediment and debris from pipes, ditches and canals.

- Dredging lakes and neighborhood canals.

- Inspecting, cleaning and performing other maintenance to our drain systems.

Your fees help to cover the cost of design, construction and maintenance of systems that improve drainage. These funds also help reduce and monitor pollutants that may enter various bodies of water, such as Back Bay or Broad Bay.

Prior to implementation of the stormwater service fee in 1993, stormwater management projects competed with other city projects for tax money. This provided funding for maintenance of existing systems but did not allow for construction of new projects, as it does today.

Jasmine Tritten: 'Bolivian Images'

By Victoria Hecht

Editor

When Virginia Beach resident Jasmine Tritten's youngest son invited her to travel thousands of miles to visit him in Bolivia, her heartstrings were tugged just enough that soon she was on the plane to South America.

Her nine days living among the colorful culture of Bolivia and its people inspired her to put the impressions on canvas.

Those memories are captured in "Bolivian Images," an exhibit of 18 oil paintings on view at The Artists Gallery through April 29.

The one-woman show is dedicated to 29-year-old son Brendon Clark, who served as a Peace Corps volunteer for three years.

"Because of my son's love for the people and country of Bolivia, I became deeply, emotionally touched and inspired to paint after a journey to this most fascinating country in May 1999," she explained.

Many of the images are from the small village of Totorá tucked high in the Andes Mountains. In that remote region Clark labored to help the Quechua Indians implement a sanitary water system and promote good hygiene to prevent the spread of disease.

Tritten was mesmerized by the Quechuans, descendants of the Incas who wear colorful woven attire and hats.

Other images she remembered and translated to the canvas were from Lake Titicaca, one of the highest and most beautiful in the world; Island of the Sun and Island of the Moon, legendary Inca sites; and pastoral scenes of serenity and tranquility.

Tritten said the past year has been one of amazing change and transformation for her.

"It's like it's all coming together — everything is positive in my life," she reflected. "I think I have fulfilled my karma."

For starters, Tritten knew she wanted to try her hand at oil painting (until recently she'd been working in pastels). She also wanted to try some different subjects and newer color palettes. And she needed the right teacher.

Then Renata Keep, an instructor at the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia, walked into Tritten's studio at The Artists Gallery. Tritten knew immediately that she'd found her teacher and role model. The two have since become fast friends.

"Anytime I spend with this woman is wonderful. She loosened me up. I'm flying high with color," she said.

Since working with Keep, Tritten's style has gone from a warm palette with lots of purples and whimsical subjects to vibrant colors and images that project a certain innocence.

Tritten also credits Constance Fahey, The Artists Gallery director, as another inspiration. When Tritten was looking for a place to serve as her studio and keep her motivated, Fahey alerted the artist to a studio opening at the gallery. It just so happened to be Tritten's favorite studio, too.

"It was like God meant it!" Tritten said. "So now my art is exploding. This is the growth I felt I needed. I love what I'm doing."

Tritten feels she is fulfilling a career which began nearly three decades ago. A native of Denmark, she discovered a passion for art as a youngster growing up in Denmark. In her teen years Tritten paced through the art museums of Europe with sketchbook in hand studying techniques of the great masters.

In 1964, Tritten got off the plane in the United States "smack in the middle of the Hippie Movement." She transplanted to California to continue her art quest in Carmel, an artists' haven.

Tritten concentrated her efforts on wildlife and domestic animals, using the old-fashioned scratchboard. She graduated from the Famous Artists' School in Westport, Conn. in 1970 after studying commercial art, illustration and design.

In 1992, Tritten received a two-year degree in interior design from Monterey Peninsula College in California.

The next year she and husband Jim moved to Virginia Beach, where Tritten continued her art studies at Old Dominion University. She received her bachelor's degree in 1997.

Tritten's "Bolivian Images" continues through April at The Artists Gallery, 2407 Pacific Ave. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Tuesday through Friday, and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays.

CCAJN holds first jet noise meeting of year

Citizens Concerned About Jet Noise (CCAJN), a 2-year-old, fast growing pro-active citizens group concerned about military jet aircraft noise and accident risk, will hold its first public meeting of the year, 2000 on Saturday, April 8 beginning at 10 a.m. in the cafeteria of Lynnhaven Middle School, of Old Donation Parkway in the Great Neck section of Virginia Beach.

Members of the public who are concerned about jet noise and accident risk are cordially invited to attend.

The agenda for the meeting will include:

- The CCAJN 2000 list of real and meaningful solutions for the mitigation and abatement of noise and accident risk.

- Initial distribution of the Spring 2000 CCAJN Voters Guide, a booklet containing candidate answers to a recent CCAJN Questionnaire. The guide would be utilized by voters in the May, Virginia Beach Council election. Additional information on candidates positions — and their record in office on jet noise issues — will also be provided. CCAJN does not plan to endorse candidates.
- A progress report on the ongoing discussion of CCAJN issues involving board members and city officials.
- A presentation by an interested law firm — with specific expertise in the field of environmental law — in regard to the possibility of bringing an Inverse Condemnation lawsuit on behalf of residents. Inverse Condemnation involves constitutional and legal rights for monetary compensation to individuals for the loss of value in one's property. Such a class action suit would be brought by individual property owners who believe their property rights have been improperly taken by the federal government, as a consequence of overflight of homes, and businesses by military jet aircraft. Recent case law around the country attests to the viability and practicality of such a lawsuit.
- A progress report on the CCAJN year 2000 Membership Drive.
- A progress report on the CCAJN appeal of its NEPA lawsuit.

Kramer wins Oticon Focus on People honor

Anne G. Kramer of Virginia Beach has been named grand prize winner in the Senior Category of the 2000 Oticon Focus on People Awards.

The national awards competition, sponsored by Oticon Inc., the world's oldest manufacturer of hearing instruments, honors outstanding hearing impaired people who provide that hearing loss does not limit a person's ability to live a full, productive and even inspiring life.

Now in its third year, the Oticon Focus on People Awards program is designed to focus attention on common misconceptions about hearing loss, correct negative stereotypes and motivate people with hearing loss to take advantage of the help that is available to them.

"Today, even with the significant advances in hearing aid technology, outdated stereotypes of what it means to have a hearing loss persist," stated Oticon Executive Vice President Peer Lauritsen. "Because of these misconceptions, 80 percent of people who would benefit from advances in hearing instruments hesitate to seek help. The reality is that, with proper hearing amplification, individuals with hearing loss can lead active, fulfilling personal and professional lives."

Lauritsen pointed out that award winners, like Kramer, serve as positive role models that help people better appreciate the advances in hearing care and what these advances can mean in terms of confidence and encourages this targeted audience to continue the momentum of financial planning and investing.

Wall Street veteran on hand for book signing

Financial freedom can be obtained in the new millennium. To embark on this path, the first step involves the pursuit of knowledge and survival skills that lead to financial self-empowerment, according to finance guru Brooke M. Stephens. An instrumental part of this process is identifying key professionals and resources.

On Saturday from 2 to 3 p.m., Stephens will be at the Association for Research and Enlightenment (ARE) Bookstore in Virginia Beach to sign her latest two books that provide inspirational insights and the financial wherewithal to master the economic journey.

Stephens comments, "The karma connection between money and spiritual well-being has significant influence over each of our lives. Money seems to have a bad reputation in so many communities — inclusive of the spiritual community."

"Wealth Happens One Day At A Time: 365 Days To A Brighter Financial Future" guides the reader on a step-by-step, day-by-day guide to breaking harmful spending habits and creating positive attitudes toward money, learning about investments and building wealth in your future. "Talking Dollars and Making Sense: A Wealth Building Guide for African-Americans" explores the history of African-American economic contributors to the United States.

Stephens, a 15-year veteran of Wall Street, is a registered investment advisor with her own consulting firm.

Kramer, who was diagnosed with progressive hearing loss 40 years ago, volunteers her time to outreach for the Hard of Hearing, an organization that promotes positive public awareness and understanding of hearing loss.

Kramer, who is self-taught in computer technology, also devotes her time counseling and instructing at-risk students entering the workforce.

She has spoken on hearing loss and its impact before the Mayor's Committee for People with Disabilities and has worked with local legislators on matters relating to hearing loss, specifically the development of a law mandating that insurance companies cover the cost of hearing aids as a member benefit.

'Eggspectant' mothers nest at Marine Science Museum

Spring is definitely in the air and in the numerous nests that are taking shape in the Discovery Room Exhibit at the Virginia Marine Science Museum.

The exhibit, "Eggspectant Eggs...And the Animals Who Make Them," located in the museum's Owls Creek Marsh Pavilion, already boasts several "eggspectant" mothers. Of equal note are the diverse animals in this exhibit who engineer live eggs and the clever lengths they go through to protect them.

Centered in the Discovery Room and commanding the most attention is a red-bellied woodpecker.

He was chosen for the exhibit because these birds drill holes in trees to hide their brilliant white eggs. Another neighboring bird in the exhibit is a northern bobwhite quail. She is known for hiding her eggs in the hedgerows that grow under farmyard fences.

An aquarium full of American eels also catches visitor's attention just as they enter the Discovery Room. Like salmon, these eels migrate great distances to lay their eggs and travel in both fresh and saltwater. The eels' journey begins in freshwater and ends in the ocean sargassum weeds, a refuge in which they lay their eggs. Conversely, salmon begin their journey in the ocean and swim upstream into the river.

Other aquatic mothers prefer to stay right at home to protect their eggs in amazing ways. For example, the African cichlid fish on exhibit retain their eggs in their mouths and only eat when another cichlid holds them long enough for her to get some "fast food."

Blue moon playlets retain their eggs in their stomachs and three of the fish in the museum's exhibit are currently "eggspecting." Speaking of blue, did you know that a single blue crab's apron can hold up to eight million eggs? This amazing lady is also on display.

Amphibian egg engineering animals are represented in the exhibit as well. The bright almost neon colors of the South American poison dart frogs are among visitors' favorite. These creatures lay their eggs in the cups of flowers in the rain forest trees. Once the eggs become tadpoles, they ooze a slime and carry them on their backs, down to the water to quickly become frogs. Watch out though, once those bright colors appear they are poisonous to the touch.

Also known for carrying their babies on their backs are emperor scorpions. Come and watch them carry and catch food for their young as we have three expectant mothers who will be delivering soon.

Four bullfrog tadpoles are also a part of the exhibit. From eggs to bouncing baby bullfrogs their development takes two full years. Come and see how one tadpole has already sprouted two tiny back legs.

Another group of animals known for their eggs are reptiles. Egg-laying snakes and lizards cover their eggs elaborately. However, for most of these scaly critters, once the eggs hatch the newborns are left on their own to survive. Featured egg-laying reptiles in the exhibit are a hogsnose snake, eastern king snake and leopard geckos. Some snakes retain their eggs inside their body which gives their babies a head-start.

Amidst the live animals are eggs of all shapes and sizes on display. Accompanying these eggs are the unique stories of "nesting" behind each one of them. Greeting visitors as they enter the exhibit is a case of cone-shaped murre eggs engineered by nature to survive the rocky ledges on which they are laid. Native Virginia bird nests are also of interest and are on special loan to the museum from The Virginia Department of Game and Inland Fisheries.

An added element of the Eggspectant Eggs...And the Animals Who Make Them exhibit is egg art. Local egg artists Karen Barber has loaned the museum an incredible selection of her eggs, both "naked" and jeweled. She transforms egg shells into dazzling kaleidoscopes, jewel boxes, perfume decanters, teal pots and many other items. Farber, along with fellow egg artist Eloise Baley Schooley, will demonstrate their "eggquisite" skills on April 20 and 22 as part of the museum's sixth annual Owls Creek Week.

Eggspectant Eggs...And the Animals Who Make Them exhibit will remain in the Discovery Room at the Owls Creek Pavilion through May 31.

Date set for annual Heart Walk

More than 2,000 Hampton Roads residents will be walking to fight heart disease and stroke at the annual American Heart Walk, Sunday, Oct. 15 at 1 p.m. at the Virginia Beach Campus of Tidewater Community College.

Say Good-bye to Starvation Diets Forever...

AT LAST! NEW SUPER PILL GUARANTEES SAFE, RAPID WEIGHT LOSS WITHOUT HUNGER — OR YOUR MONEY BACK!

Las Vegas, NV — Clinical research of a plant compound called Amorphophallus Konjac, derived from the roots of yam plants native to Asia, is being heralded as a "life saver" for the up to 50 million people who suffer from obesity in the US. And word is spreading rapidly throughout the 150 million Americans who go on weight reduction diets each year about the dramatic weight loss results from a product called FatStopper 2000, which contains this crucial ingredient.

M. Karaki, M.D., a leader in the study of Amorphophallus Konjac and weight loss.

CONTROLS "CRUCIAL FACTOR OF APPETITE"

According to Japanese medical doctor, Mutsuhiko Kuroki, "Losing weight with Amorphophallus Konjac (the active ingredient in FatStopper 2000) does not mean ingesting Amorphophallus Konjac into the body and letting it make you thinner in some mysterious way. Rather, [it] is not digested by the body but acts to help you reduce as it passes through the digestive tract. In effect, Amorphophallus Konjac helps you reduce by controlling that crucial factor of appetite and by working upon the digestive tract and its contents to promote improved metabolism and thus to speed the burning of excess fat."

Considering the latest dieting statistics, which indicate that the average diet lasts only 72 hours because of hunger and frustration, it's no wonder that FatStopper 2000, with its all-natural active ingredient, is taking the diet industry by storm! With over 60 million Americans alone who suffer from high blood pressure due to excess weight, this new product is offering hope, help and dramatic results.

YOU EAT AS YOU NORMALLY WOULD AND STILL LOSE WEIGHT!

Clearly, the hardest thing you are ever told to do is change your eating habits. Because food not only nourishes your body, but also your emotional well being, changing what you eat can be almost impossible. The psychological stress imposed upon a person by altering the way he or she eats is usually enough to sabotage a diet.

That's why the huge success rate attributed to FatStopper

2000 can be easily explained. Because the product causes a feeling of fullness, you eat less. You don't change WHAT you eat—you merely don't have the desire to eat as much. You don't feel like you're on a diet — because you're not! You're simply choosing to eat less because you don't want more. SAFELY FLUSHES FATS AND CALORIES RIGHT OUT OF YOUR BODY!

But no matter what you eat, the concentrated form of Amorphophallus Konjac found in FatStopper 2000 forms a non-digestible and harmless gel-like coating around food particles, causing the food to be digested at a slower rate; The gel slows the action of digestive enzymes to release sugars and fats at an even rate, causing excess fats and calories to be flushed right out of your body!

That's right! So whether french fries are your favorite comfort food, or your life isn't worth living without a bowl of ice cream — don't worry! The properties of FatStopper 2000 allow you to eat these whenever you like and still lose weight!

There are no special foods to buy, no calories to count, no dangerous drugs to take—and absolutely NO side effects! None! You merely take FatStopper 2000 as directed—that's it! Within days you'll see noticeable results. And in clinical studies, some subjects lost up to 24 pounds in the first month and 48 by the second month! Remarkable!

BEFORE
Sept. 10th
Weight: 165 lbs.

Without changing the way she ate, Tanna lost 49 lbs. in a mere 8 1/2 weeks! On Sept 10 she weighed 165 lbs. And by the 12th of November her weight was 116!

"I cannot stand dieting. To me, giving up the foods I love to eat could be worse than being fat. FatStopper 2000 was a real lifesaver! I lost 49 pounds in just 8 1/2 weeks and NEVER felt like I was on a diet. I've never looked or felt better. I know I am much healthier, too! My friends are all green with envy."

Tanna D., San Diego, CA

Results atypical. Results can vary.

AFTER
Nov. 12th
Weight: 116 lbs.

U.S. Patent reveals weight loss of as much as 28 lbs. in 4 weeks and 48 lbs. in 8 weeks!

Scientific Data Proves What Dieters Already Know: Appetite Control "Crucial Factor" in Dieting Success! Clinical research of patented plant fiber shows it drastically reduces hunger—many lose up to 24 lbs in 4 weeks! Amazing formula awarded international patents for safely producing dramatic weight loss and lowering cholesterol!

If you're able to exercise moderately, that's great. If you're not there yet — that's fine too—you'll still lose the weight. Once you lose enough weight to feel comfortable walking or doing some other light exercise, you'll speed up your metabolism even further and tone up those sagging muscles. Get ready to look and feel healthier and more fit than you ever have!

INTENSIVE RESEARCH LEADS TO 6 PATENTS IN 5 COUNTRIES!

As an informed consumer, you'll be relieved to know that the ingredient in FatStopper 2000 formula has been awarded not one, but TWO United States Patents: the first one for its effectiveness as a weight loss product, and the second for its ability to reduce harmful cholesterol levels! And, the US is not alone in its embrace of this product. In fact, Japan, France, Germany and The United Kingdom have all awarded the FatStopper 2000 formula patents in their countries as well!

Clinical studies around on Amorphophallus Konjac and have been conducted in some of the world's leading medical schools and universities. And the results of these intensive studies have been published throughout the world in major medical journals.

CAUTION: YOU MIGHT LOSE TOO MUCH WEIGHT!

You know the old saying about never being too rich or too thin. Well, you CAN literally be too thin. Given the potency of FatStopper 2000 to effectively help eliminate years of fatty deposits from your body while not causing you any side effects, you may be tempted to overdo it. Don't allow yourself to become too thin! You may need to regulate your pill intake, skipping a pill occasionally or even skipping an entire day or two. Have a weight loss goal in mind and try to stick to it.

Study to determine best fire station sites

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The proposed six-year capital improvement budget includes $50,000 for a study to evaluate where the Thalia and Ocean Park fire stations should go — their present locations limit expansion — and to study the needs for other fire stations.

Fire Chief Gregory B. Cade mentioned the study in answer to a question from Councilman Louis R. Jones at a City Council budget workshop Tuesday. Jones wanted to know where the Ocean Park station was going to be located and remarked that the perception in the Bayside area was that it would be built in Diamond Springs.

Cade also discussed the addition of five additional firefighters in the proposed operating budget, which is $27,786,727 for the upcoming fiscal year compared to $26,886,995 for the current year.

He said the additional firefighters will increase staffing from 124 to 128 persons per position, reducing overtime to maintain staffing. He said that the goal of minimum staffing is affected by the aging work force — increasing the use of sick leave, the Family Medical Leave Act, more leave time accrued by senior employees and decisions on compensatory time — employees can decide when to take compensatory time.

He said that of the 108 assigned personnel per shift, 87 are required for minimum staffing and 21 positions are utilized for make up for planned leave, vacancies, injury leave and unplanned leave such as sick leave.

According to national research, he said, 1,300 persons per position are recommended which would enable the assignment of 113 firefighters per shift.

Cade said he would have to return to council for approval to purchase land for the Sandbridge Fire Station and anticipated it would take six months to complete the purchase and design after that. He said that construction should take less than 18 months.

He also said that Virginia Beach would have no trouble filling the firefighter positions, but that to run a recruit school, at least five applicants were needed. The new firefighters are expected to go on line on Jan. 1.

They're "wild" about animals

Students from Linda Krupp's language arts classes at Glenwood Elementary combined their artistic talents and language arts skills to develop "Animal Book Projects." From stories they had read, the youngsters used boxes and paper mache to depict different animals. Showing off their projects are Danielle Ponzurick and Nina Teodoro.

Clarke named Sentara Va. Beach General's top physician

Dr. John P. Clarke, a general physician and thoracic and vascular surgeon at Sentara Virginia Beach General Hospital, has been selected Physician of the Year for 1999.

The Physician of the Year award is presented to a physician in the Hampton Road's community who meets the following criteria: is highly respected by his/her peers; possesses outstanding professional ability; demonstrates obvious compassion and concern for others; and whose community and professional activities closely exemplify the ideals of pathologist Dr. John J. Krueger, who served as a key member of the hospital's medical staff for 30 years. Clarke is the third recipient of the award, now presented annually at the John J. Krueger Lecture.

Clarke attended medical school at the Medical College of Virginia, interned and did his early residency at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, then completed his residency in surgery at the University of Virginia Hospital in Charlottesville, Virginia. He joined the medical staff at Virginia Beach General Hospital in 1968 after a thoracic surgical Fellowship at the Medical College of South Carolina.

During his 32-year tenure, Clarke has been instrumental in initiating, planning and designing the Intensive Care Unit and patient Operating Rooms. He also initiated and chaired the committee to obtain radiation therapy at Sentara Virginia Beach General Hospital and initiated the YAG Laser Program.

"Dr. Clarke is a dedicated, extremely talented physician who has always felt it was his responsibility not only to provide quality care for his patients but also to serve in a leadership capacity in helping to advance hospital programs and facilities," said Robert Graves, administrator of Sentara Virginia Beach General Hospital and vice president of Sentara Healthcare. "He is a most deserving award recipient."

"It has been a great privilege to practice at Virginia Beach General Hospital," said Clarke, "and to be involved in the care of so many wonderful Virginia Beach residents." Clarke is presently a member of the Sentara Healthcare Board of Directors and the Sentara

Medical Affairs Committee.

Additionally, he served as president of the Virginia Medical Society and president of the Virginia Surgical Society.

Dolphin exhibit dazzles

The Dolphins Gallery of local wildlife photographer Ronn Maratea is sure to dazzle Virginia Marine Science Museum visitors as they enter the IMAX lobby of the main museum. Colorful photographs of dolphins frolicking in the waters off the coast of Virginia Beach are on display from April 1 through Sept. 30.

Maratea is a renowned photographer who retired several years ago from his commercial photography business to pursue his passion of wildlife photography. Ronn and his wife, Jan, have traveled extensively in Africa to capture his subjects on film. His nature and wildlife photographs have been displayed in other museums, calendars, greeting cards, books, posters, brochures and advertisements throughout the world.

Locally Maratea is a dedicated volunteer at the Virginia Marine Science Museum. He photographs whales and bottlenose dolphins for the Stranding Center's research and identification program. All of his photographs were shot while on-board Virginia Marine Science Museum sponsored Dolphin Watching Boat Trips. Trips run daily in the summer and on weekends in the fall.

The Dolphins Gallery features 11 large-formatted photographs. Close-ups as well as long shots feature the dolphins alone or in pods exhibiting much of their playful behavior.

Complimenting the Dolphins Gallery is the "Dolphins" IMAX film, currently featured in the museum's Family Channel IMAX 3D Theater. This newly released 2D MacGillivray Freeman Film takes audiences under the water's surface for a romp with inquisitive Atlantic spotted dolphins, acrobatic dusky dolphins and the familiar bottlenose dolphin.

SPRING HOME IMPROVEMENT

Spring cleaning shortcuts to help keep home in order

Unfortunately, there aren't enough hours in the day for most busy families to keep a house immaculate without help.

"Having a tidy house and going through the ritual of spring cleaning, has an amazing effect on a person's mood," says Linda Burzynski, president and chief operating officer of Molly Maid, a nationwide residential cleaning service.

Here are few shortcuts to keeping order:

■ Prescription for organization. To get rid of clutter in the medicine cabinet, throw out any expired medication and hygiene products. Then organize the remaining products based on the frequency of use.

In addition, ladies can go a step further, and throw out all cosmetics that are more than six months old.

■ Dust deja vu. Thoroughly vacuum all heating ducts and air vents. The collection of winter dust will be re-deposited into the air once the air conditioning is used.

■ Corner care. To clean cobwebs out of high areas, such as ceiling corners, wrap a damp cloth around the end of a broom. The dampness of the cloth acts as a magnet when it comes in contact with the cobweb.

■ Winter windows: To remove filmy winter residue left on windows, use a spray mildew remover, scrub with wet sponge until clean, then spray with window cleaner and polish to a shine.

■ Pet problems. Use rubber gloves or a damp sponge to remove loose pet hair from rugs and furniture.

■ The little artist. To remove greasy handprints and crayon marks off walls and tabletops, apply a small amount of solvent such as kerosene and WD40. Spray directly on marks and clean using a stiff toothbrush. Then clean off any remaining residue with soap and warm water.

■ Spring fresh. Instead of just covering up musty winter smells, eliminate them by distributing partially filled saucers of white vinegar around the house and ventilate by opening windows and doors.

■ Citrus solution. To remove lime or hard water mineral buildup on bathroom fixtures, rub lemon juice over the stain until dissolved, and then rinse (do not allow juice to sit on fixtures for long periods of time. It could damage porcelain or enamel fixtures).

■ Wipe it away. To conceal scratches on wooden floors, apply a small amount of wax with very fine steel wool to the floor. Then use a dry cloth to dry and polish.

■ Dirty deeds. To remove dirt from carpet, mix 1 teaspoon of mild detergent with 1 cup of lukewarm water and whip to form heavy suds. Apply dry suds to small areas, one at a time, with a damp sponge. Then remove suds with a spatula and rinse with water.

Now that the new super horns are just over the horizon, the F-14s will be replaced. Still Capt. Zobel said, no decision has been made on where the super horns will be assigned on the East Coast. They already have a home on the West Coast — Lamar in California in the San Joaquin Valley area.

Capt. Zobel said he did not know whether the super horns were just as noisy as the other planes, more noisy or less noisy. He did repeat that the Navy has not selected a home for them.

Mayor Meyera Oberndorf said that she was proud to have the F-18s based in the city, and that it was never her position to have the base closed down. Still, she said, she has heard briefings and a little more relief is needed.

That why she saw something in the suggestion to look to the FAA for relief. She said that she did not feel comfortable in asking the Navy to fund noise attenuation because its budget was slim. So she looked into the FAA fund and decided to talk to legislators to get some accommodation for military areas. "I would never want to close down (Oceana) or impact Navy funding."

In trying to accommodate the needs of the Navy and the citizens, some middle ground must be reached, she said.

Dr. Zobel described some measures taken by the Navy to solve the problems, but pointed out, "We still have to fly."

He said the Navy has had briefings, made videos, had air shows, sponsored "Race at the Base" and opened other activities to the citizens at large.

NAS Oceana is the busiest master jet base in the nation with 220,000 annual operations a year.

The NALF (Naval Auxiliary Landing Field) Fentress has 140,000 annual operations per year. Chambers Field is home to the E-2 Hawkeye and C-2 Greyhound aircraft that also deploy on an aircraft carrier.

The full complement of aircraft assigned to NAS Oceana is 309, but on any given day there may be from 180-260 aircraft there.

Stuart Gordon, a Virginia Beach attorney, said the importance of the resolution that it represented the first time the seriousness of the problem of jet noise. He said however, they "must oppose it as well as defend it." He said the resolution creates the illusion that the city is trying to find a meaningful solution and does not address the problem in a comprehensive manner.

He said the city which lobbies rigorously to get the jets located here could work equally rigorously to solve the problem the jets caused.

He said some remedies could include the use of outlying fields and latering flight patterns. He said that one thing is clear — there is no silver bullet. The problem, he said, must be approached in a comprehensive manner.

He said that the resolution was not an act of bad faith, but that it was not meaningful.

John Shek, a member of CCAIN, said that the organization never advocated closing Oceana.

He recommended the use of federal funds for noise abatement.

He said, however, that it was not an FAA problem, but a Department of Defense problem.

To accomplish what is suggested in the resolution, he said, the Virginia delegation to Congress would have to overcome enormous legislative hurdles.

Meanwhile, he said, the resolution should be left on a back burner.

He said he commended council for taking action to address the problem, but said the problem should be addressed in a more comprehensive manner.

He suggested seeking a commitment from the Navy to examine the flight operations. He suggested seeking congressional support to create a new airport in an outlying area for practice and to construct another hush house. One hush house is being constructed at Oceana. The house will take one plane at a time for engine inspection and repairs.

Shek invited council to a meeting on the subject on Saturday at 10 a.m.

Hal Levinson of Great Neck Meadows said that the resolution was unrealistic. He said also that CCAIN has never advocated tapping the FAA. He said that he said that money should be sought from the same source like the FAA.

He thanked council for taking up the issue.

This year's court tritons are John C. Brogan IV, vice president of the TAF Group; Thomas E. Fraim, president and chief executive officer of MASA Corporation; Michael J. chief executive officer with PHR/Gold Key Resorts; and John A. Tithou, partner with Mayes and Valentine.

Seven princesses stood at court with the Tritons and King Neptune. The princesses are high school juniors chosen each year because of good grades and community involvement. They represent Virginia Beach at functions during the year, but especially during the September Neptune Festival events.

Princesses in attendance were: Hannah Virginia Bregman, Frank W. Cox High School; Katherine Copeland Sessoms; Norfolk Academics; Anne Catherine Dinsmore, Frank W. New chief Jacocks settles into post from community policing as a project to a philosophy — a way of doing business for the department.

They plan to take it slowly and carefully.

"Departments are almost forced to go into community policing as a project because of the way grants from the federal government are structured. There's a lot of reporting requirements — you have to account for officers you hire and all their time and show what they're doing in the way of community policing."

"That's not a bad thing, but as the grants expire we have more latitude as to how to use those officers. The city has made a decision to pick up the expense of those officers once the grant funds run out."

Currently, there are 135 community policing officers in Virginia Beach. The department has been approved for an additional 15 in the coming fiscal year, Jacocks said they won't be brought on until June 2001.

They're delaying the hiring to address recruiting issues, which will allow the department time to run two more academy sessions. Recruiting is an immediate challenge which Jacocks intends to tackle.

"It's a problem all over the country. Everybody is having recruiting problems. I think one of the reasons is that the economy is so good right now there are a lot of jobs out there. The technology field is growing by leaps and bounds, and atypically positions in that field pay better than a starting police officer."

The military community, once fertile ground for the Virginia Beach police to harvest recruits, isn't as abundant anymore, Jacocks said.

Again, he feels the technology training people gain in the military is luring them to the private sector.

Virginia Beach also sets high standards for its recruits. According to Jacocks, 500 people applied for the last academy. Only 19 passed the selection process.

"I sleep a whole lot better at night knowing I have less officers out there than I'm authorized to have. I don't want to have more than I know shouldn't be police officers. We're not going to lower our standards. We'll make adjustments in where people work and scheduling to compensate for being understaffed — as opposed to lowering standards."

Jacocks would like to see improved community relations, especially with the minority community. It's another issue with which law enforcement agencies across the nation are wrestling.

"The racial discord is still out there in society. We're very sensitive to those issues, probably more so than most (agencies) and private-sector businesses. We're scrutinized so much more closely and are aware of it," Jacocks said.

In 1989, the Virginia Beach department was criticized for its handling of the Greekfest riots at the oceanfront. It still bears the scar, but Jacocks feels the city has made inroads.

The Beach's basic academy offers cultural diversity and sensitivity training.

"I think we've made great strides here since the riots of '89," Jacocks said.

The fraternities at Duke University, which normally go to Myrtle Beach for spring break, are talking about boycotting it because of the issue of the Confederate flag over the South Carolina capitol. Instead, they're talking about coming here. I think that's a pretty good indication that a lot of improvement has been made."

Jacocks is now beginning to make his mark on the Virginia Beach Police Department.

While still acting chief, in January he enacted the Police Chief's Youth Advisory Council, comprised of a student from each of the city's high schools. Jacocks said that relationship is already fostering better understanding between young people and the police.

"It's been good so far. We get a lot of questions from them about what we do and why we do it. I've asked them to bring to meetings questions that their friends and associates have, too, and to spread the word that they're on the council," he said.

Next month, the department will kick off a Youth Citizens Police Academy as well. Though the city already offers a Citizens Police Academy, the new one will be more "youth-oriented and fast-paced. They'll actually have to act as though they're a police officer and be confronted with some of those situations."

The pilot session will be comprised of Ocean Lakes High students and members of the chief's youth council.

A resident of Pungo and father of a teen-aged son, Jacocks' expects his schedule to undoubtedly be busy. But he will still make time for the Navy Reserves, for which he is a lieutenant commander. He's also a board member of the Sugar Plum Bakery and co-chair of the Virginia Beach 4-H Livestock Show and Sale. For four years he chaired the Pungo Strawberry Festival, stepping down last year.

He's a 1999 graduate of Leadership Hampton Roads. He holds an associate's degree in police science from TCC, bachelor's degree in criminology from St. Leo College and a master's degree in public administration from Golden Gate University.

Jacocks feels that his rise through the ranks to the department's top post is a sign of stability in Virginia Beach.

"I know the morale of the troops is up — they have the philosophy, 'If he can do it, I can do it,'" Jacocks said.

development agreement dated Aug. 5, 1999 is a binding contract that is enforceable by and against each party in accordance with its terms.

He says neither the city nor the developer may terminate the agreement without a basis or justification stated in the agreement.

"A change in attitude toward the project or a change in political opinion occasioned by the referendum will not justify a termination of the agreement."

If the city unilaterally terminated the agreement in response to an advisory referendum, without some other basis or justification in the agreement, such action would constitute an event of default by the city and would expose the city to adverse consequences.

He says consequences may include exposure to a claim for significant monetary damages as well as a possibility that a court may award specific performance to the developer and order the city to perform its contractual obligations and complete the transaction with the developer.

He says that a default also may harm the city's credibility and thereby weaken the city's ability to negotiate and enter into future financial undertakings.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley brought up the "what if" situation again during a budget workshop Tuesday. Budget discussions seemed to be the appropriate place for the discussion, she said.

The proposed budget includes $14,630,000 for the 31st Street Parking Garage which is part of the 31st Street Development plan. Financing the project would be by revenue bonds which would be repaid by revenues realized by the use of the 800-space garage.

She asked whether the 31st Street property was still owned by the development authority. It is and if the city were to decide to use the property for a park, it would have to come up with $3.5 million plus interest ($4.2 million) to pay the development authority, said Walter Kraemer, acting budget director.

Henley said she was bringing up the costs in case the project was abandoned because the city always has things that pop up after the budget is approved.

Councilman Linwood Branch III said in any event council should

"You can't just take the cream off the cake."

Councilwoman Reba McClanan

look at parking in that area. He said that the number one complaint of residents is that there are not enough parking spaces at the beach. In that area there is no parking, he said.

If there is no project, there will be no parking garage, Mayor Meyera Oberndorf said.

"Doing things and not talking about the cost," said councilwoman Reba McClanan, "those days are gone forever." She said that she saw the garage as for the park, but said, "You can't just take the cream off the cake."

If the council reversed its decision, asked Oberndorf, does that mean that there will be another petition on the Town Center (another public/private partnership plan which has met with some opposition)? She said that maybe council should put everything on the ballot.

Don Maxwell, economic development director, said that the department wants citizen participation and wants citizens to get in on the planning.

Henley suggested that maybe the council should include the public/private partnership strategy in the budget.

McClanan said that maybe that section should be pulled out and placed on the council agenda separately.

McClanan said she also wanted to know how much would be required in the real estate tax rate to pay for the garage. "We can't absorb that kind of cost."

Branch asked for a report card on other public/private partnerships.

The development would include $30 million of capital investment for the hotel and restaurant, $48,106,365 in projected lease payments to the city for land and parking spaces over 65 years and one million dollars for community park improvements.

The city would pay $4.85 million for land purchased or authorized for purchase to date, $3.8 million to acquire land for the parking garage and $10 to $11 million to construct parking garage and elevated walkway and for streetscape improvements.

The city estimated returns at $10 million during the first 10 years of lease payments; $39 million in net revenue in years 11 through 25 and a continuation of the revenue for the balance of the lease term. The city will retain ownership of all land and the largest oceanfront park will be provided at no cost to construct or maintain.

Councilman Louis R. Jones said that a private developer does not go out and pay for architectural drawings and plans unless he has a firm contract. He said that he could not see a developer paying for all that and having an escape clause in the contract for political reasons.

Lilley said that when the city negotiates a contract with a developer it includes contingencies. "We try to stay away from having to pay liquidation damages. We can't just walk away and pay no damages."

For all practical purposes the time for circulating petitions, worthy or well-intentioned as they may be, the time for a referendum is over. It was over when the development agreement was signed Aug. 5, 1999 — unless the citizens are willing to pay the cost of a breached contract, parking at 31st Street, developing a park, and paying the development authority for the land.

Council, board in agreement on $472 million school budget

Chairman Edwards: Willing to receive in lump or appropriations

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The school system and the city, not always compatible at budget time in the past, had a united front this week as the upcoming school budget was considered at a City Council budget workshop.

Daniel D. "Dan" Edwards, School Board chairman, said that the schools still would like a lump sum appropriation from the city, rather than appropriation by categories, but that the request is largely one of form and not substance. He said that the School Board was proud to be classed with a city which has been described as one of the best managed cities in the nation, and that he was pleased to receive the budget from the city in either form.

The school budget, $472,303,684, has already been approved by the School Board. It compares with the current budget of $456,389,080, an increase of $15,914,604, or 3.49 percent increase.

The local contribution under the city's revenue sharing plan will be $208.2 million compared to $200.8 million in the current budget.

According to School Budget Director Vickie Lewis, Virginia Beach contributes twice as much funding as is required by state law and is the largest source of funding.

State revenue will account for $200.3 million compared to $195.7 million in the current year while the rest is in sales taxes and federal contributions.

The last will be lower this year. Thanks to the lottery funds which were released to localities last year, and which the school system decided to spend on school construction, the school building program is on schedule.

And because of a decline in the school enrollment, net reduction in positions came to 30.8 resulting in savings of $1.75 million. Reductions include $2.5 elementary teachers and teacher assistants; 21 secondary teachers and paraprofessionals; 6.25 clerical positions and 3.5 elementary guidance positions.

Other positions were added — in special ed. for the Landstown High School planning year, for middle school guidance, transfers from grants, nursing positions, distance learning dispatcher, telephone technician, clerical, custodial at Seateack/Cooke, open campus and administration positions.

Edwards said that because of changes by the General Assembly, reductions in required contributions to the VRS (Virginia Retirement System) were reduced. The schools will have a full-time magnet school for the gifted for 500 students and gifted programs at Princess Anne High School and Ocean Lakes High School.

Dr. Timothy R. Jenney, superintendent of schools, also announced the distance learning in high school which will enable students to enroll in courses where demand in their home schools is not sufficient for a teacher. The courses will be offered electronically. In this way, students at schools where there is not a demand for certain courses will not have to drive all over town to take the courses.

Lewis said that where the system received $9.7 in lottery funds last year, it expects to receive $9.5 million this year. While the number of portable classrooms will be reduced because of new construction, Jenney said that portables are helpful in eliminating massive movements of children over short periods of time.

In answer to a question from Councilwoman Nancy Parker, Jenney said that

Veteran Jacocks takes helm of VBPD

He's first Beach officer since 1969 to lead the department

By Deanne Brady
Correspondent

Virginia Beach Police Chief A.M. "Jake" Jacocks Jr. vows he never said he was going to be the Virginia Beach Police Department's leading man when he started his career as a precinct desk officer in 1971. But recently one of his co-workers during those early days recalls just that.

"They swear that I did — and can remember when it happened," Jacocks explained, but denies any recollection of making such a statement.

It wasn't until he became captain in 1990 that Jacocks began to think that becoming police chief was a reasonable goal.

When he became the acting police chief after Chief Charles Walls retired last August, he made it perfectly clear to City Manager James K. Spore that he was aiming for the top slot.

"I told him he was going to have to compete for it," said Spore at Jacocks' appointment ceremony last week.

The nationwide search to find the best qualified person for the position ended last month when it was determined that he was already in town and on the job.

The decision to make Jacocks the new chief of police was reaffirmed repeatedly at the ceremony that packed more than 200 of his colleagues, friends and family members as well as city officials into the auditorium of the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia to celebrate his promotion.

Jacocks was heaped with praises at the event for his experience, skills and ability to fill the position.

"You fit the bill to a tee," said Mayor Meyera E. Oberndorf to the new chief during the ceremony. "I am confident you are the right person for the job."

Commonwealth Attorney Robert J. Humphreys and Spore also agreed with Oberndorf. Both told the crowd that they were extremely pleased with their decision.

All the accolades were a bit overwhelming for Jacocks.

"I'm not sure there are words to describe it," he explained. "It makes me

Libraries indirectly benefit from lottery

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Without lottery proceeds the Virginia Beach library construction program would not be on track. Although the funds were used or school construction, they freed up money for the library.

Referendums for both school and library construction failed in referendums, but just two and a half weeks after the referendums, the lottery funds were approved for the schools by the General Assembly. Voters rejected the programs which entailed a real estate tax rate increase.

City Manager James K. Spore said at a City Council budget workshop Tuesday that neither programs would have been possible without the lottery funds.

The big news on the library front this week was that plans have finally been agreed upon for the Bayside Library.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan expressed disappointment, however, that a library for the Green Run area doesn't seem to be in the picture for the five-year capital budget program.

The Bayside Library and the special services division for the blind and visually handicapped currently share a site on Independence Boulevard with the Third Police Precinct. They all needed more space.

After the failed referendum, a library facilities review committee appointed by council and composed of both City Council and library board members, recommended leasing space for the Bayside Area Library and Special Services Division, leaving two buildings on the site for expansion of the Third Police Precinct. The city also considered leasing space in a shopping center for a library.

The plan decided upon was to purchase additional land from the adjacent property owner — the land is not developed, to demolish the present special services division and to build a separate one-story building for the library and police precinct. Library Director Marcie Sims said that there would be no interruption of services and the arrangement would meet all parking needs.

In a lighter mood, she said that to make it easier for patrons signs could be erected saying "Get Books" or "Get Booked."

Sims said that the libraries are trying to incorporate Sunday hours as new libraries are opened.

When asked by Mayor Meyera Oberndorf how the library system compared with other localities in Virginia, such as Fairfax, Sims said she didn't think anyone has what Fairfax has. She said that Virginia Beach is deficient in library space, and that in Chesapeake, where the library system got top grades, a referendum was approved seven years ago. Still, she said, she was "proud of where we're going."

McClanahan said she didn't understand what happened to the Green Run library.

Sims said that the staff was hoping that by the end of five years, funds will be available for that library.

Spore said it was a decision council made last year.

When asked by Mayor Meyera Oberndorf how the library system compared with other localities in Virginia, such as Fairfax, Sims said she didn't think anyone has what Fairfax has. She said that Virginia Beach is deficient in library space, and that in Chesapeake, where the library system got top grades, a referendum was approved seven years ago. Still, she said, she was "proud of where we're going."

McClanahan said she didn't understand what happened to the Green Run library.

Sims said that the staff was hoping that by the end of five years, funds will be available for that library.

Spore said it was a decision council made last year.

Great Scot! Tartan Day more than kilts

JUST A WEE NIP. Donald Fraser shared his expertise in Scotch whisky — as well as his wit — with an attentive audience.

No celebration of all things Scottish would be complete without those familiar icons that are generally considered the basic symbols of the culture.

Members of the Scottish Society of Tidewater and the patrons of Virginia Beach Central Library who attended the Tartan Day festivities on Saturday came in contact with those cherished cultural symbols — bagpipes, kilts and tartans — and much more.

Authors, storytellers, dancers, musicians and experts in Scottish history and culture were featured in the all-day event. Authorities on Scottish genealogy, food, clothing, weaving and whiskey offered presentations and demonstrations in their fields of expertise.

Nancy Miller, president of the Scottish Society of Tidewater as well as a collection development librarian at the Central Library, headed the planning and organizing of the program.

"National Tartan Day celebrates Scottish heritage and the people who came from Scotland to the United States and the contributions they made," she said. "Many of them were signers of the Declaration of Independence. Many of our presidents have had Scottish ancestry, so it's just a way to celebrate the heritage."

According to Miller, the Scottish Society of Tidewater is simply an organization that seeks to provide an opportunity for people of Scottish ancestry — or people who have an interest in Scotland — to get together, make new friends, and learn about the Scottish culture and its history.

"My ancestors were Scotch-Irish, which means that they originated in Scotland in the area just south of Edinburgh and they immigrated to Ireland before they came to the United States," Miller explained.

THUMBS UP!

The volunteer spirit

They're the ones who give up their Saturdays to coach Little Leagues, clean up blight, be a Big Brother or Big Sister, or even paint the homes of elderly residents they don't know.

They're the ones who visit their children's school to help with mailings, projects and bulletin boards.

They help out at soup kitchens and homeless shelters, blood drives and fundraisers.

They start unique programs to get others involved with the community, whether it's reading to students at schools or doing environmental work at a state park.

They're the ones who would rather do something more productive with their time than watch television, so they lend a hand wherever needed.

They are volunteers' and now is the time to recognize them.

With Paint Your Heart Out Hampton Roads gearing up for another successful year, Keep America Beautiful Month under way and organizations all across the area pausing to recognize their volunteers, it's time to reflect on the outstanding achievements of these individuals during National Volunteer Week.

Without their invaluable assistance, it's difficult to imagine what jobs might go unfilled.

Or what tasks would go undone.

Or how many children's lives would be untouched by an adult.

This week, National Volunteer Week, celebrates the contributions of more than 100 million Americans each year — pure volunteerism at its best.

"Where would we be without these dedicated volunteers? They are the ones feeding hungry people, comforting sick people and grieving children, and providing support to the mentally ill, to name a few tasks being tackled. They are inspirations to all of us that we have the power to make a difference and change lives," said Elizabeth Lloyd, executive director VOLUNTEER Hampton Roads.

Locally, there are dozens of organizations manned by men, women and even children that are laboring to make life better for their fellow citizens. There are organizations for myriad interests and concerns, whether the favorite cause is children, the elderly, education, the disabled, the homeless, veterans, even science and history.

Each person has some talent to give. All it takes is a call to VOLUNTEER Hampton Roads, 624-2400, to discover your special niche.

Then start making a difference. Now is the time to the answer the call. — V.E.H.

Caller ID convenience rings of annoyance

I don't get on my high horse too often, but one of the latest breeches of etiquette is giving me a real "hang up."

When Caller ID was invented, I was convinced that it was the greatest thing since, well... the telephone. Finally, a way to deal with annoying prank callers!

Before Caller ID became popular and accessible to everyone, there were really only one method to find out who was prank calling—*69 (not cheap at 75 cents a pop to find out who that person was breathing heavily into your ear). And if you wanted to screen calls, you had to rely on your answering machine.

Then Caller ID came on the scene and opened all new possibilities.

You could come home and check to see how many people had called while you were at work. You could see if you'd missed an important call. You could see just how many telemarketers' calls you had dodged.

But there was a downside to this new technology: people started calling back numbers on their Caller ID.

People make lots and lots of calls. Sometimes they dial the wrong number and hang up when the realization hits. And if there's no answering machine you can't leave a message one way or the other.

But there was a downside to this new technology.

Nowhere's the annoying part. More and more folks are starting to call back, once seeing the number on their Caller ID, and they aren't the friendliest in the world about it.

This is the typical conversation: "Hi (that is, if you get a salutation). Your number is on my Caller ID. What do you want?"

Here's the retort: "I'm not really sure. What's your phone number. I could have misdialed. Sorry."

The typical response to that: "Well, don't call me again."

In my mind I'm saying, "You wouldn't be so annoyed — and annoying — if you didn't call back every number on your Caller ID."

My advice: Get an answering machine so someone can leave a message!

It just seems there is a growing lack of telephone etiquette, from the reliance on call waiting to people eating and yawning in your ear. Both of those are big turn-offs.

Sure, we have all these great new telephone advances, like Caller ID, voice mail and call waiting, but at what expense? We're losing our manners.

That's just something for you to ponder next time you realize you've inadvertently dialed a wrong number.

THE VIRGINIAN-PILOT

Their records speak volumes

Two former governors face off in the race for Virginia's U.S. Senate seat. Under one, the test scores for Virginia students improved in an ever-upward trajectory of quality. In fact, during his governorship, Virginia could boast of some of the finest public schools in the nation. That governor was Chuck Robb.

Contrast that with the downward freefall in the quality of Virginia's public schools experienced under the tutelage of Gov. George Allen. Virginia's ranking not only didn't improve under Gov. Allen, it went the other way.

Why? Well, it couldn't have helped much that George Allen cut every public school dollar he could find, from kindergarten through community college, all across our state. Add to that the Allen propaganda that portrayed our public school educators as scoundrels who do little to nothing except collect their paychecks at taxpayers' expense.

What a joke! Cut their salaries, sully their reputation and refuse to provide materials and facilities to manage the ever-growing population of students, and then blame the teachers for educational decline.

And, this man wants to be our senator! Why on earth would we want to give Allen a chance to mess up the national educational policy as much as he did Virginia's? But, wait — we are told we needn't worry about Allen's abysmal record on education. After all, he is a strong supporter of amending the U.S. Constitution to ban the burning of the American flag.

Sorry, that merely changes the prospect of a Sen. Allen from scary to downright terrifying. Allen is not only clueless about rational policies for dealing with our most pressing national problem, but he doesn't understand that free speech is the most important right guaranteed by the First Amendment. The last freedom we can afford to cede to the government is to grant it the right to regulate how we can express our political speech.

On the other side of the ballot we have the choice of re-electing Sen. Chuck Robb. It is noteworthy that Sen. Robb did not abandon his staunch support for public education when he moved from the statehouse to the U.S. Capitol. He is an acknowledged leader on every single Senatorial initiative aimed at strengthening our localities' ability to effectively educate our children for their own future and that of the nation. And what is Sen. Robb's position on a constitutional amendment to permit jailing those who burn the flag in political protest? He opposes it. Completely ignoring the opinion polls, Sen. Robb took his opposition to the Senate floor to warn the nation that we must not risk burning down the forest to save the trees.

"It is not the symbol," he passionately stated, "but the rights that symbol represents, that are worth dying for."

Given that U.S. Marine Corps Lt. Chuck Robb voluntarily put his life on line in the rice paddies of Vietnam 25 years ago to defend that right and the rest of our Constitution, he has certainly earned the right to be listened to on this issue. I, for one, am listening and urge all my fellow citizens who love this country and our Constitution to do the same.

So, without even discussing the environment (where Allen's record is even more abysmal than it is in education) or Social Security, veterans, health care, Medicare prescription coverage or hundreds of other issues where Robb, unlike Allen, stands consistently with the vast majority of Virginians, it is clear that Sen. Robb's judgment, principle and leadership make him the man best suited to represent us and our hopes for the future in the U.S. Senate.

Given Allen's record and ill-conceived policies, it is beyond me how this race can even be close at all.

'Do not make yourself low'

By Allen W. Smith

"Do not make yourself low; people will tread on your head." — Yiddish proverb

We will be put down often enough in life even if we do nothing to invite criticism from others. But, if we develop a low opinion of ourselves and let that opinion be known, we almost guarantee that others will have a low opinion of us and act accordingly.

It is sad, but the reality of this world is that there is a strong tendency for the confident to take advantage of the insecure. In the words of an old Russian proverb, "Make thyself a sheep, and the wolf is ready."

It is important that we remember that we are all important and special. We are not better than others, but neither are others better than us. We are all children of God, and it is just as wrong for us to put ourselves down as it is to put others down.

We want to avoid becoming aggressive toward others, but we must also be careful not to let down our guard and allow others to take advantage of us.

We can dream of a world where there is only love, and where everybody looks out for others as well as themselves. But for all know that the world we live in is not such a world. If it were, there would be no need for national defense and police departments.

Most people are good, honest, and loving. But, unfortunately, there are some who are a threat to the rest of us. No amount of wishful thinking can change this fact.

We must not allow this truth to discourage us from trying to make the world a better place, though.

There is much work to be done, and we all need to join hands and accomplish as much as possible. We should treat other people the way that we would want them to treat us.

We dare not be so naive as to believe that everyone will treat us kindly. But many people will, and we will feel good about ourselves. We have little control over how other people live their lives, but we have a great deal of control over our own actions.

So shouldn't we concentrate on living up to the standards that we have set for ourselves regardless of how others behave? Think about it.

Articles bring back memories of boot camp

The recent articles about the U.S. Marine Corps in the Virginian-Pilot written by staff writer Dave Mayfield are well written and bring back memories of many years ago.

In 1943, I was 18 years old and eager to join the Marines because I had heard that they were the best and I wanted to be a hero. So why not join the best to fight war? I went to the Marine recruiting station in Atlanta and formed the sergeant on duty that I wanted to join. The sergeant stood about 6-foot-2-inches tall with broad shoulders and a crew cut and was dressed in what was referred to in those days as "dress blues." He looked down at me (I was 5-feet-8 1/2-inches and weighed 140 pounds).

"I don't think you can make it, son. You are too short and don't weigh enough," he said. I told him how important it was for me to become a Marine and that I could sing all of the verses to the Marines Hymn. He told me not to bother singing and that he would take a chance on me, but he doubted that I would last one week at boot camp.

After he signed me up he said that I would probably take my boot training at a place called Parris Island Marine Corps Recruit Depot, S.C. This sounded good to me because I would be close to home if I ever got any leave. I was put on 30 days leave and told to report back to Atlanta. I really enjoyed that 30 days because people already looked up to me because I was a Marine.

I reported back to Atlanta and was put on a troop train headed for Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego, Calif. I was scared to death. Atlanta was as far from home as I had ever been and now I was heading thousands of miles from home and didn't know anybody.

The train was jammed to capacity and we had to stand in line to get into the diner. That was the first time, but the last time, I had to stand in line. The trip was long and tiresome, and we arrived at San Diego at about midnight. We were greeted by some of the meanest drill instructors straight from hell.

Why, they screamed at us, kicked us in the butt and started a dehumanizing process that lasted the entire training period! I was cussed at, forced to clean latrine with a toothbrush and march miles with wet backpacks. I was the smallest man in my platoon, but they gave me no slack. I'm sure that if I could have found the gate that led outside I would have left. But I fooled the recruiting sergeant and stuck it out.

The proudest day of my life was when my drill instructor stuck out his hand and said, "Welcome, Marine."

Retention ponds play important role in stormwater management

Last week we discussed some facts about stormwater management. Today we are going to continue the stormwater management issue and talk about some actual things that can and are being done.

The Mayor's Report

Mayor Meyera Oberdorf

Virginia Beach is located in the coastal plain region of Southeast Virginia with a population of approximately 440,000 and covers an area of approximately 312 square miles. Ninety-eight square miles of the northern developed portion of the city drains stormwater to the Chesapeake Bay, 204 square miles drain stormwater to the North Landing River and Back Bay, and approximately 5 square miles drain stormwater to the Atlantic Ocean.

We all know and realize that uncontrolled drainage and development of land has a significant adverse impact upon the health, safety and welfare of the community. We also know that stormwater runoff can carry pollutants into receiving water bodies, degrading water quality, and that the pollutants in stormwater runoff can interfere with the estuarine water quality, thereby impacting biological productivity of these areas. It is also known that substantial economic losses result from these adverse impacts on city waters and many future problems can be avoided if land is developed in accordance with sound stormwater runoff management practices.

The city's stormwater management system is made up of approximately 200 miles of major ditches and canals, 600 miles of roadside ditches, 2,000 miles of underground pipes, 52,000 drainage inlets and manholes, and 122 lakes, ponds and canals (which are five acres in surface area or greater). This drainage system consists of 1,727 outfalls which discharge stormwater to the "waters of the United States."

In order to protect, maintain and enhance both the immediate and the long-term health, safety and general welfare of its citizens, the city of Virginia Beach adopted an ordinance on April 18, 1988, which established stormwater management regulations, procedures and requirements in relation to stormwater management plans, and penalties for violation of such regulations, which require the implementation of Stormwater Management Facilities (SWMF). This Ordinance was modified in June 27, 1995.

The definition of a Stormwater Management Facility is, "a device that controls stormwater runoff and changes the characteristics of that runoff including, but not limited to, the 4 quantity and quality, the period of release or the velocity of flow. For purposes of the above mentioned ordinance, the term also includes retention and detention basins, also known as flow equalization basins, which are no more than 15 feet deep, as measured from normal (dry weather) water level to the lowest level of excavation. It specifically excludes borrow pits. Throughout Virginia Beach there are approximately 1,600 stormwater management facilities, either in place or waiting to be constructed.

Two distinct types of stormwater management practices are listed in the Best Management Practices: Preventive Measures and Control Measures. Preventive measures are sometimes called source controls and are management techniques that reduce the exposure of materials to stormwater, thereby limiting the amount of pollutants picked up by water. Some of these preventive measures are: debris removal, education programs, exposure reduction, minimization of pollutants, parking lot and street cleaning operations, runoff diversion and secondary containment.

Control measures, two of which we will list and explain today, are used to reduce the levels of pollutants in stormwater that has been exposed to pollutant sources. Inexpensive techniques, such as settling, biological uptake of substances, and infiltration can be employed to treat stormwater.

Dry Detention Devices are stormwater facilities which temporarily impound runoff and discharges it through a hydraulic outlet structure to a downstream drainage system. Since a detention basin impounds runoff only temporarily, it is normally dry during nonrainfall periods.

Two of the most common dry detention devices are the dry detention basin and the extended dry detention basin.

Dry detention basins detain a portion of stormwater runoff for a specified length of time, releasing the stormwater slowly to reduce flooding and remove a limited amount of pollutants. They are referred to as "dry detention" because these devices dry out between rain events. Pollutants are removed by allowing particles and solids to settle out of the water. Important reasons for use of dry detention basins are reducing peak stormwater discharges, controlling floods and preventing downstream channel scouring. The extended dry detention basin drains more slowly or may retain a permanent pool of water.

Wet retention basins are stormwater management facilities, which similar to detention basins, temporarily impound runoff and discharges its outflow through a hydraulic outlet structure to a downstream drainage system. Unlike a detention basin, however, a retention basin also includes a permanent impoundment and, therefore, is normally wet, even during nonrainfall periods. The permanent pool of water enhances the removal of many pollutants. These ponds fill with stormwater and release most of it over a period of a few days, slowly returning to its normal depth of water. They have some capacity to remove dissolved plant nutrients, an important characteristic to protect lakes, rivers and estuaries.

Wet ponds can be used in most locations where there is enough space to locate the pond. Construction costs for wet ponds can be somewhat high because the ponds must be large enough to hold the required volume of runoff and to contain the permanent pool of water. Maintenance costs run about 3 to 5 percent of the construction cost per year. Pollutant removal is rated as moderate to high compared with respect to other stormwater devices.

Because people find wet retention ponds to be aesthetically pleasing, wet ponds can be sited in both low and high visibility areas. Quite often, residents feel that the permanent pool of water enhances property values as well as the aesthetic value of the area. The outlet must be sized to provide adequate time for pollutant removal, yet discharge the stormwater before the next storm occurs. Pond shape, depth and surrounding fringe areas must be considered to maximize the effectiveness of the basin. Marsh plants around the pond help remove pollutants and provide habitat. Wet ponds are one of the most effective and reliable devices for removing pollutants from stormwater.

Maintaining the water quality within the retention pond is the key to having an environmentally conscious and aesthetically pleasing pond. Sediment, the particles that settle to the bottom after being washed into the pond, accumulates and decreases water quality. In time, dredging and de-mucking will be necessary to maintain the specified water holding capacity.

Combating erosion is another important step in increasing a retention pond's value. Erosion can alter the appearance of slopes and pond edges. Inadequate drainage capacity and lack of vegetation are two large contributors to the erosion around retention ponds. Wetland vegetation and native grass mixes also provides stabilization, beautification and water quality improvement.

As you travel around our fair city and you run across a "small body of water," remember this article and know that these small bodies of water are helping to reduce "to the maximum extent practicable" the amount of pollutants that are discharged from the air and land by rainfall, thereby protecting the waters of our city, our state and our country.

Denise Bradley: Medicine and ministry

By Victoria Hecht

Editor

Virginia Beach resident Denise Bradley takes Jesus' call to "preach the kingdom of God and heal the sick" (Luke 9:2) seriously. A registered nurse and mother of two, she was commissioned Lynnhaven Colony Congregational Church's "parish nurse" on Sunday.

While parish nursing formally came into existence in 1985, it's still a new concept to the Hampton Roads community. A blend of medicine, education and healing ministry, parish nurses are registered nurses who assist congregation members in their physical, emotional and spiritual well-being. However, they do not replace a regular health care provider.

A Minnesota native, growing up Bradley yearned to be a singer or actress. "But the common sense side of me said I should be able to make money and take care of myself," she said.

Bradley was always good at science and had an interest in medicine. However, she didn't want to invest the many years it takes to be a physician, so nursing was the logical choice.

"It's a good field," she said. "I was able to find good and rewarding jobs."

Being a nurse also allowed Bradley to do something else she loves — help people.

"It all seemed to fit," she said.

The Broad Bay resident has worn many nurses' caps during her 18-year career. She spent several years working in a psychiatric treatment facility, followed by several years in a public teaching hospital's surgical intensive care/cardiac care unit.

She went on to work in the cardiac pacemaker industry, traveling nationally to teach doctors, nurses, technicians and other industry-related people.

After the birth of her daughter Lauren, now 8, Bradley wanted to "slow down and stay closer to home." She found a job with a group of local cardiologists as a nurse specialist, assisting cardiac patients with heart rhythm problems. After five years in clinical practice, she returned to industry, this time working for a manufacturer of cardio monitoring devices.

On March 1, Bradley resigned to become a stay-at-home mother to Lauren and toddler Mitchell, 13 months. She wants to be more available for her church and family.

"I don't need to be on the road to D.C. selling medical equipment — I need to be home with my kids, not paying somebody else to raise them. It didn't make sense," she said. "But I needed something to keep up my professional skills and nurture that side of myself."

Bradley regards Lynnhaven Colony Congregational Church as her family, too. She was welcomed to the 200-person congregation as a new member in January. After being raised a Catholic and later becoming active in a Lutheran church, Bradley feels "at home" in the non-denominational setting.

She views serving as parish nurse as one way to give back to the church community. Bradley calls it a "perfect blend" of medicine and ministry.

"Parish nursing has been around since the mid-1980s, but it's not common to this area," she said.

When Bradley learned that Bon Secours offered a free training program at DePaul Medical Center in Norfolk, she signed up.

"It's all volunteer — no one pays you for your time. It's just a job from the heart," she said. "It's not just professional, it's spiritual. It's a good balance for me right now."

As parish nurse, Bradley will address the health needs of her church family and the larger community. She'll do health screenings and evaluations, hold health fairs, educate people and be a resource on health issues. She plans to do a monthly newsletter and will focus on a different health issue each month. If someone is about to have surgery and needs advice or just a listening ear, she'll provide that, too.

"A lot of people are so overwhelmed by the medical system that they don't know what their rights are. They don't know what kids of questions to ask. I see myself as an advocate and liaison to the parishioner and the medical system," she said.

Bradley is excited about the possibilities which the volunteer post will offer. She has made an initial commitment of one year, four hours per week.

"There's a need. I think that if people are open-minded and will allow me to come and help them, then I can serve a real purpose. I think, too, that within the congregation it will be a valuable resource."

Exploring past lives can be key to happiness

While counselors once urged their clients to put the past behind them, today a growing group of professional therapists, clergy and hypnoticists are helping clients to remember their pasts — past-life incarnations complete with love, tragedy and triumph — as part of self-discovery and personal growth.

On April 26-30, a five-day special joint conference of the Association for Research and Enlightenment (ARE) and the Association for Past-Life Research and Therapies (APRT) will be held at the ARE's Virginia Beach headquarters. The conference will teach counseling professionals and the public how experiences buried in the past can lead to new pathways in the present.

"Reincarnation and the Ongoing Edgar Cayce Legacy" combines a comprehensive, three-day professional training conference conducted by the Past-Life Therapy Training Institute April 26-28 with "Edgar Cayce's Passage into Consciousness," a weekend conference dedicated to exploring the teachings of Edgar Cayce April 29-30.

The conference concludes with an all-day experiential workshop on past-life regression on Sunday, April 30 from 9:30 to 5 p.m. The pre-conference training event is open to professionals who regularly use hypnotherapy or regression.

For registration and more information about "Reincarnation and the Ongoing Edgar Cayce Legacy" or the professional pre-conference training event call the Association for Research and Enlightenment, 1-800-333-4499.

Southern landscape is explored by Contemporary Art Center of Virginia

A region rich in culture and visual depth, will be explored at the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia this spring. "Southern Exposure," an exhibition of contemporary photography, reveals an obsession with place, family and social history.

On view April 14 to May 28, the exhibition provides the opportunity to survey the myriad interpretations of the southern landscape's fertile narrative potential. The works selected for exhibition are highly associative and elicit sensory responses. Included are works by William Christenberry, William Eggleston and Sally Mann who have mined the particularities of this region making it a familiar part of American photography. These artists, along with eight other notable photographers — Maude Schuyler Clay, Huger Footie, Earlie Hudnall, Birney Ives, Tom Rankin, Mike Smith, Jeanne Umbreit and Carrie Mae Weems — document the vivid imagery of the South through this exhibition, which is originated by the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia.

Hazy bayous, kudzu-covered buildings, abandoned porches, twisted wrought iron, proliferating blooms — all images that remain highly associative and particular to the South — are among the subjects captured within this survey. Notably, selections from Sally Mann's Deep South series shot in Louisiana and Mississippi are included.

These beautifully-toned photographs, while contemporary, look as though they are from an earlier century.

By contrast, William Christenberry's crisply focused landscapes, shot mostly in Alabama, resonate with clarity like the sharp imagery from the stories by James Agee. Nearly all of the photographers selected to participate in the exhibition live in or have grown up in the South.

An opening reception will be held Friday, May 5 from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia. Known for having the best social events at the Beach, Art & Co., invites you to an evening of uniquely southern food, spirits and music by the Norfolk Southern Lawnmen. This event is free and open to the public.

The Southern Series In conjunction with Southern Exposure, the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia presents a month-long series of programs celebrating the myths and realities of the South through photography, literature, film, garden design, music and cuisine:

- ✓ GOOD ROADS
- ✓ CONTROLLED GROWTH
- ✓ ABUNDANT RECREATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES
- ✓ HIGH QUALITY OF LIFE

And we did it with a tax rate that is among the lowest in the Commonwealth of Virginia. In 2000, we have so much to celebrate, but Meyera's not through.

She's still listening and responding by launching Virginia Beach into the 21st Century with a visionary E-Government initiative that will improve communications between the people and their government while providing better citizen access to municipal services. And as chair of Southside Hampton Roads Mayors and Chairs and vice chair of the Hampton Roads Partnership, Meyera Oberndorf is leading the way toward more regional cooperation.

Eggs, eggs and more eggs!

Easter Sunrise service slated

Eggs, eggs and more eggs are featured in the Virginia Marine Science Museum's newest Discovery Room exhibit, "Eggs and Animals Who Make Them." Through May 31, the exhibit features live animals, but a diverse collection of eggs that are incredible.

On display will be a collection from local egg artist Karen Farber, who takes egg decorating to its highest level. Farber, an egg artist for nearly 30 years, takes various bird egg shells and transforms them into dazzling kaleidoscopes, jewel boxes, perfume decanters, tea pots and many other items. Her eggs showcase many of the skills she has learned in the master's program in egg art which include beading/jewelry, filigree, pysanky and diorama. Some of her intricate eggs combine different art mediums such as enameling, ceramics, Swarovski crystal, vintage glass and velvet encasing.

Also on display and equally impressive is Farber's collection of "naked eggs." This collection of 24 natural eggs include all shapes, sizes and colors from over 19 bird species. Of note are a Cassowary egg with its textured light green appearance, and an Emu egg whose greenish tint is so dark it resembles black granite.

In addition to loaning the museum her collection, Farber will demonstrate her "eggquisite" skills on April 20 (noon to 4 p.m.) and April 22 (9 a.m. to 5 p.m.) as part of the museum's 6th annual Owls Creek Week special programs. Also demonstrating will be Elaine Baley Schooley, another local egg artist.

She too has loaned some of her collection for the Discovery Room exhibit. Both artists are members of the International Egg Art Guild. Farber will demonstrate enameling and beading/jewelry. Schooley, a descendant of Ukrainian immigrants, will show the techniques of her specialty, Pysanky, traditional Ukrainian egg art.

More eggs included in the "Eggs and Animals Who Make Them" exhibit are native Virginia eggs. This enclosed collection is on loan from the Virginia Department of Game and Inland Fisheries.

Other aspects of the exhibit feature live eggs engineering animals like a northern bobwhite quail, a hogsnose snake and American eels. Visitors will learn about the "egg-citing" world of eggs, the measures taken to protect them, the incredible parents they come from, and the beautiful babies born. The exhibit and demonstration at the Owls Creek Marsh Pavilion is free with museum admission.

The 73rd annual Easter sunrise service will be held at the Cape Henry Memorial Cross, Sunday, April 23 at 6:20 a.m. The service will be emceed by the Rev. Philip M. Waltz, associate minister of Virginia Beach United Methodist Church, delivering the sermon.

The music for the service will be provided by the Armed Forces School of Music Student Band, Naval Amphibious Base, Little Creek. The service is sponsored by the Beach Borough, Virginia Beach Ministerial Association, the City of Virginia Beach and Fort Story.

In the event of inclement weather, the service will be held at 7:30 a.m. at the First Presbyterian Church, 36th Street and Pacific Avenue, Virginia Beach. The service is open to the public.

proud and humble." Jacocks, a native of Norfolk, worked his way up the ranks of the department. He worked in all four of the city's precincts and has served in various assignments, including Special Operations, Investigations and the Professional Standards.

Last April he was appointed deputy chief of operations. He continued to perform duties for that position even after taking on the responsibilities for acting chief of police.

Jacocks admitted that the seven-month waiting period was filled with stress and anxiety, but he wasn't the only one affected by the process.

His wife, Linda, said she was probably even more anxious than her husband.

"We're glad it's over," she said.

Linda, who met her husband about 28 years ago when she was working as a forensics technician in the department, said that the show of support for her husband had been overwhelming.

The day his appointment was announced, the telephone started ringing at 4 p.m. and rang constantly until midnight, she noted about all the calls from those at the department who phoned to congratulate Jacocks.

It was the same story at work. Master Police Officer Don Rimer said that while the congratulatory calls were pouring in, those at police headquarters were cheering for their new commander.

"Everyone went nuts, yelling and screaming and hugging," Rimer exclaimed.

"He is one of us," he noted.

"He's not an ex-ec you never see."

Because Jacocks is the first Virginia Beach officer to be appointed as police chief since 1969, Rimer explained that the trend is usually for city officials to look outside the department to fill the position.

"They know who he is," said Rimer about how police officers usually see Jacocks at their meetings, ceremonies, and training.

The staff is looking for positive changes from Jacocks, said Rimer. "He is that kind of person," he noted. "He is proactive. They know that."

Since Jacocks interim position began he has implemented special projects such as the Youth Advisory Council and will soon begin with Jacocks for about 28 years, said that his long-time colleague has been acting like a chief since he started.

"He always strives to do the right thing even when no one is looking," he explained.

take the department from just conducting projects that promote citizens' involvement to turning those actions into a philosophy for his staff.

In the end, he hopes to have all officers think problem solving, he said.

"We can't do our job ourselves," he commented. We need help throughout the city.

Maybe Jacocks never said he wanted to be the city's top law enforcer, but his actions may have spoken louder than words to those around him.

Command Duty Officer Capt. Howard Carr, who has worked with Jacocks for about 28 years, said that his long-time colleague has been acting like a chief since he started.

"He always strives to do the right thing even when no one is looking," he explained.

Great Scot! Library celebrates Tartan Day

Donald Fraser, a connoisseur of Scotch whisky, shared his knowledge and humor with library patrons and members of the society. Fraser explained to his audience how Scotch whisky was made, provided his audience with samples of whisky, and invited them to join Cuidaghe O Corn O Uisgebeatha, Ltd., an organization that promotes the appreciation of Scotch whisky.

In addition to educating his guests' palates on a variety of Highland and Lowland whiskeys, Fraser debunked one of the myths that has stalked the Scots since the 1745 Battle of Culloden near Inverness.

"Most everyone knows that the Scots have the reputation for being cheap — tight. They wouldn't buy anything or they would get it at the lowest price, or something like that," said Fraser. "This is really not true. The average Scot is a spendthrift."

"At the Battle of Culloden, we were decimated on the field. Everything was taken away from us at that time," noted Fraser. "Kilts were banned. We couldn't have the bagpipe played. We didn't have anything at all."

The Scots, however, did have the responsibility for occupying their seats in the House of Commons. Every district in Scotland had to send a representative to London.

Before leaving for London, each representative would attempt to gather enough money from people in his district to cover his expenses. Contributions of a half penny here and two pence there usually didn't add up to much. Often representatives were forced to leave for London with woefully inadequate funds. "When the representative was in London, he was rather tight because he couldn't buy anything. He might have a pound to go down to London for two years," said People from the courts of Europe encountered these Scots in London. It seemed to the courtiers that Scots never bought anything, wore old torn clothing, and begged for everything they needed.

"That's where they took the reputation for being cheap, tight, penny-pinching, but they weren't. They just didn't have the money," explained Fraser.

Scottish music (Celtic) has had a substantial impact on American music, and folk musician Bob Zentz delineated that Celtic influence for an appreciative Tartan Day audience.

Zentz prefers the cittern, an instrument related to the lute, in playing Celtic music because it can function as both a melodic and chordal instrument.

"An important characteristic of a lot of Scottish music is that it frequently omits the note that makes a chord either major or minor, so you can really play a tune against that background. All those other notes are still there even though you're only playing the melody on one string at a time."

"Soldier's Joy" is a well-known tune in Scotland, Ireland and America," said Zentz.

"It's basically an example of one Celtic origin tune that made the transatlantic crossing."

"I think the ballad part of the Scottish tradition is real important — storytelling," said Zentz. "A good example is 'Barbara Allen,' which is probably the universal ballad."

Food and clothing have long been among the most distinctive features of the Scottish culture. Karen Becker, a historical interpreter with the Museum of American Frontier Culture in Staunton, shared her expertise in both areas with program participants.

Haggis, it seems, still remains Scotland's traditional national dish. "Haggis is famous for being made out of stuff that normal, sensible, intelligent human beings would never want to eat," said Becker.

"It's oats, liver, heart, lungs — that's the so-called traditional haggis and there's usually onions, some sort of fat, salt and pepper, and possibly maize as a spice. I don't put lungs in my haggis," she said.

FOLK MUSICIAN. Bob Zentz shared his musical expertise with an appreciative audience in the Central Library auditorium.

"Physically, you put all the stuff together, put it into the sheep's stomach, and sew it up. You drop it into a kettle of boiling water and you let it boil for two hours."

Becker pointed out that finding the proper ingredients for the traditional haggis in the U.S. can be difficult.

"I was interested in making it out of all sheep's parts and discovered that it really is better. I think the secret is the sheep's liver has a milder taste than a cow's liver," Becker said.

"This year I got two stomachs from the butcher, and one stomach was cut in such a way that I couldn't use it."

Becker is interested in more than just recipes, ingredients and how traditional foods are prepared.

"I'm also interested in — and I admit I'm not there yet — trying to track down exactly where these traditional Scottish foods come from and when they begin to become 'traditional' Scottish foods," she said.

Becker's expertise is not limited to Scottish foods and their evolution. Her expertise extends to traditional Scottish clothing of the 17th and 18th centuries as well.

"The traditional Highland clothing for men was the great kilt with yards and yards of colorful fabric, colorful stockings, waistcoats, and all kinds of fancy things," Becker noted. "Women of the same time period were wearing pretty much the same styles and fashions." She added, "It was the men who were different. Scottish men were the peacocks. They were basically wearing the same styles that men everywhere were wearing, only with a kilt."

"Tartan refers to a fabric pattern or design. Here in America, we use the term 'plaid' to describe this fabric," Becker said. "It's a checked pattern woven in with different colors going in both directions. Almost always of wool."

teaching children who speak foreign languages is not critical, but the numbers are steadily growing. He said that the last time he asked, 32 different languages spoken by students were identified. He said that the system here is not at a point where it is concerned but classrooms are being provided.

In comparison to the regional average in salaries — the school system uses the mid-Atlantic region for comparisons, it would need a 10 percent increase in salaries to meet the average.

The total compensation increase is $15.88 million. The starting teacher salary for the upcoming year is $29,750 compared to the current $27,314, or a 8.9 percent increase. The top of the scale salary has been increased from $48,288 to $50,610 or a 4.8 percent increase.

The capital program is in good shape, he said. Where the referendum, if passed would have completed the program in six years, it will now take eight years.

Tony Arnold, building superintendent said that nobody has been more aggressive than Virginia Beach in its building program.

Tidewater K-9 Academy

Mark Hachathorn, CCS Certified, Master Trainer • "Your Family Dog Training Center"

The number one cause of death for dogs in the U.S. is not parvo, heartworm or rabies. It is housebreaking problems. A puppy is adorable, but when a hectic lifestyle prevents the owner from spending enough time on training, the result is often a trip to the local animal shelter, where unwanted dogs are regularly put to sleep. Many owners don't know where to begin in pet training. Tidewater K-9 Academy's advanced, in-home training techniques teach your dog how to behave at home. F&M Environmental Technology, Inc.

In Business Since 1994

Most people are now aware that exposure to asbestos and lead in our living or work environment has been linked to serious health problems and that these materials were extensively used in residential, commercial, industrial and institutional buildings just two decades ago. A great number of these buildings are still in use today. Asbestos was used in floor and ceiling tile, roof shingles, insulation, and as many as 3,000 other components. Lead based paint coated walls and window casings and lead piping carried drinking water. Asbestos can cause respiratory problems up to and including lung cancer. Lead poisoning, by inhalation or ingestion, begins to manifest in gastrointestinal problems and can result in mental retardation in children and damage to the central nervous system, coma, and death in both adults and children.

F&M Environmental Technology, located in Virginia Beach at 1247 Culver Lane, Suite A, phone 427-0538, is a lead and asbestos abatement specialist. They are available to inspect and remove these dangerous substances from single and multi-family dwellings, commercial buildings, schools, hospitals and industrial complexes and properly dispose of them. Using state-of-the-art equipment and technology, F&M Environmental Technology's trained team of professionals offers emergency response service and they are fully licensed, bonded and insured. The experts there are certified through the state and the EPA to offer training. They train people into this field in 13 different countries in the world. The techniques used by this firm are in compliance with all EPA and OSHA regulations.

EGG-CELLENT ART. Karen Farber's delicate egg creations aren't just for Easter. They're savored by collectors year-round.

By Victoria Hecht
Editor

When Karen Farber's great-aunt introduced her to a new hobby, she knew it was "eggs-actly" what she had been looking for to test her talents. On that day nearly 30 years ago, the older woman came home excited about what she'd learned at a senior citizens' class — making velvet-covered eggs. Over the past three decades, Farber has honed her skills, elevating egg art to a higher level. Her transformations of simple eggs into the elegant and dazzling require precise hands, lots of creativity and a little luck. Just in time for Easter, Farber will demonstrate her "eggs-quiste" skills Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. during the Virginia Marine Science Museum's sixth annual Owls Creek Week. The week is a feature of the exhibit "Eggs-traordinary Eggs...And the Animals Who Make Them." Farber's work has progressed far beyond those velvet-covered eggs of yore. "I don't concentrate on one certain

Farber's eggs showcase many of the skills she has learned in the Master's Program, in Egg Art, including beading/jewelry, filigree, Psyanky and diorama. Some of her intricate eggs combine several art mediums, such as enameling, ceramics, Swarovski crystal, vintage glass and velvet casing. Her array of creations includes kaleidoscopes, jewel boxes, perfume bottles, tea pots, Christmas ornaments. □ See EGG-CELLENT, Page 10

Soil is in top farm family's blood

FARMING IS IN THEIR BLOOD. Robert White Jr. and his father, Robert White Sr., were recently honored as the 1999 Virginia Beach Farm Family of the Year in Agriculture because of their significant contributions to the farming industry and community.

Whites have found niche as marketers

By Deanne Brady

Not many people can say they love their job, but for Robert White Sr. and his son, Robert White Jr., they can't think of a better way to make a living than farming the land they've cultivated all their lives. The honorees of the 1999 Virginia Beach Family of the Year in Agriculture say the best part about working their fields is that they can enjoy the great outdoors, the fresh air and the smell of dirt. At the same time, the most gratifying part about their occupation, White Jr. noted, is taking the soil and seed and watching the grain multiply. "It makes us feel proud," he explained. "Most people know our fields in this area." The White farm is one of 154 in the community. They were selected for the special award from some of the previous honorees over the past three decades. □ See SOIL, Page 10

Cape Henry students fly high at competition

Hubble Telescope project wins fifth graders 2nd in nat'l contest

By Jason Norman
Correspondent
To most people, a meadow is nothing special — just a huge expanse of grass, flowers, insects, trees and other natural elements. But to the children of Cape Henry Collegiate School, a meadow is a special place for fun and learning. As part of the NASA Student Involvement Program (NSIP) 1999-2000 competition, fourth and fifth graders from Cape Henry took part in experiments around their school. The fourth grade's project involved the observation of a meadow, a garden and a bird sanctuary. The fifth grade completed on a video report of the Hubble Telescope, an accomplishment that earned them second place in the nation — out of more than 3,000 participants. Members of the fifth-grade team were eager to discuss their work. "We chose NASA because it seemed exciting, and because no one else was doing it," said Nick Dolencuk, 11. "It was a lot of fun to do." "For our project, we had to find a lot of information on the Hubble Telescope's Wide Field Camera 3," said Emily Venter, 11. "We did research on it, and the camera that it replaced." "I wanted to do this project because my uncle works at NASA, with computers," said Amber Templeton, 10. "When I had to get that kind of information, I just called him, and he helped me learn about it." "We found out that we'd won second place in the nation about two weeks ago," said Wesley Forehand, 11. "We were surprised; we felt great. We worked on this project about four times a week for an hour during school. "Sometimes, we'd even come in during lunch," he continued, "but never on weekends." "The fourth grade was required to pick an environmental spot to visit, so we picked three around campus that we could easily observe," said Dr. Joyce Holdich, coordinator of the event. "The students had to write a report describing their various study sites, and the experiments they performed. "I think the hardest part was that the final report couldn't be more than 250 words, which was hard to express after five months of work." Many fourth graders spoke about their

EARTH DAY '00

Practice the 3 R's

"The Earth does not belong to man. Man belongs to the Earth. Man did not weave the web of life. He is merely a strand in it. Whatever he does to the web, he does to himself."
Chief Seattle

Thirty years ago, Wisconsin Sen. Gaylord Nelson posed an idea that many people of his generation thought was off kilter — a day set aside to honor Mother Earth.

Who would have thought that three decades ago Earth Day would evolve to the acclaimed status that it enjoys in 2000? Soon after the first recognition of Earth Day on April 22, 1970, two momentous occasions were celebrated by environmentalists — passage of the Clean Water Act and creation of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Americans have two reasons to celebrate Mother Earth this weekend, Earth Day on Saturday and Easter — the pinnacle of spring — on Sunday.

Earth's "children" should do their parts individually to make this a better planet for all.

Because environmental awareness is still a relatively young movement, it requires the support of every man, woman and child. If you are already doing your part to preserve the Earth for future generations, congratulations. If you aren't, you should be. It doesn't take a one-person war to save the planet, but if everyone were to pitch in with their small part, the possibilities are endless.

The easiest way to do your part is to practice the "3 R's" of environmentalism every day:

■ Reduce — This one requires the least amount of work. When shopping, consciously choose products with the least amount of packaging. Eschew those overpackaged products—you're paying for the pretty wrapping, not the product. Reducing waste output is the key.

■ Reuse — This requires a little more work. It may mean reusing plastic supermarket bags to line trash cans, for example, or use these again at the grocery store. Give items a new purpose.

■ Recycle — This requires the most effort, but luckily most Hampton Roads localities make it easy on residents with curbside pickup. Think of the spiritual reward in knowing you helped.

Consider the impact of recycling. In one day alone, for example, 1.5 million pounds of consumer-related aluminum is recycled by Reynolds Aluminum. This is the equivalent of 1,470 average-sized garbage truckloads of aluminum being diverted from landfills.

There are other ways to maximize your impact, too. In honor of Arbor Day or even to remember a loved one, why not plant a tree? Or to help celebrate Keep America Beautiful Month in April, why not undertake a roadside cleanup project?

On Earth Day, do take the time to smell the roses. Take a hike through one of this area's many parks or refuges. Participate in Earth and Arbor Day festivities. Consciously observe nature's glory at work around you.

Take the opportunity to look, listen, smell and feel. And don't forget to practice the "3 R's."

Remember that a good planet is hard to find. — V.E.H.

Values is as values does

The anti-corporate globalists are outenmassed I wonder if most Americans are as confused by this rally in D.C. as I am. What exactly do the protestors hope to accomplish by rallying against the World Bank?

Surely, we need an international bank dedicated to loaning capital to at-risk nations who have no access to private capital.

Perspectives

By Eileen Huey, columnist

Do they want debt-forgiveness for impoverished nations who are forced to spend 10 times more on debt service than on health care, even though AIDS and other deadly plagues are sweeping their country? If so, that's a laudable goal, but forgiveness of debt is up to the policy makers of the creditor member states, not the bank itself.

Equally moral is the protestors' stand against child labor, sweatshops and other human rights abuses that are ignored in the trade agreements around the world. But none of that is the purview of the World Bank either.

More on target are the objections raised by the environmental groups to the World Bank's irresponsible financing of projects that fail to take into account the damage unbridled developers rack on our planet. Now there's an issue that not only cries out for action, but is within the Bank's authority to actually do something about.

It is amazing to witness how quickly the media ratcheted up the so-called "Battle in Seattle" into riot status, and is chafing the bit to do the same with this rally against corporate globalism. I'm old enough to remember American cities burning for a whole summer, students being gunned down on a college campus, and Billie-clubs cracking black skulls in the South and student skulls in the Midwest, Eastern and Western states.

Those often turned into riots, to be sure, although many were as much the doing of over-reactive police as the protestors themselves.

If we can manage to keep our cool and genuinely listen to the concerns of the newest crop of young American activists, perhaps we can avoid the mistakes of the past. I am personally impressed with the fervor and numbers of young people who are moved to action on such humane issues.

Unlike the Vietnam War, these youngsters don't have a dog in this fight. I give them great credit for caring enough about their fellowman to take the time from their busy lives to raise their voices for those who are voiceless in this new global economy.

Admittedly, this weekend's action is somewhat misdirected. It is not the World Bank or, for that matter, even the World Trade Organization who should be blamed for policies that insure the benefits of the global economy will insure overwhelmingly to the multinational financiers and corporations.

They merely follow the policies of our own government, and those of other wealthy member states, which give the international conglomerates and foreign dictatorial governments free license to exploit those whose labor produce the goods and to degrade the world's environment.

Both Congress and the Administration have the authority to put a stop to the exploitation of workers by demanding an end to both child and prison labor and to denying workers the right to organize. Plus, it is high time that Congress stop catering to the major oil companies and auto makers and adopt the Yokota Accords to lower greenhouse gases and save our planet.

It would only require that the U.S. put its foot down in support of these reasonable and critical human values, all of which we profess to believe in at the core of our being. Both NAFTA and GATT desperately need amending to include core labor standards and environmental protections. If developing countries in those trade agreements refuse to go along, then, fine — we'll withdraw our billion-dollar market from their goods and services, and even be willing to pull out of the World Trade Organization if necessary.

But that won't happen. In the first place, Europe would absolutely follow our lead when it comes to core labor rights and environmental standards. More importantly, access to our market is vital to the prosperity of every developing nation in the world. If we ever stood up for our values on a fair and equitable basis, we would win the respect of the whole world. Even better, we could counter the "money-grubbing imperialist" image America is tarnished by throughout much of the international community.

The answer is neither to keep China out of the World Trade Organization nor to continue the failed embargo on Cuba that, despite its failure, has not been reconsidered for over 25 years. It's about exporting American values along with American goods and services.

It does no good for us to support political freedom if we don't bolster that support with demands for essential economic freedoms (including workers' rights) that must underpin any successful democratic government based upon the free-enterprise system.

The question is not what we should do — the protestors have that part exactly right. It is whether we still value the dignity of the common man and genuinely believe in protecting our natural world.

Who can blame those who wonder if America merely pays lip service to those values while, in reality, only values the amassing of the almighty buck by whatever means will produce it most.

Sitting on my desk is a colorful reminder that we should all be young at heart.

Clinton will face the music; one way; someday

In a speech before the Society of American Newspaper Editors, which isn't exactly a right wing conspiracy group, Bill Clinton said, "I'm not ashamed about being impeached." This is really a great statement to make for little school children to hear. It reminded me of a fellow who was in class with me in junior high school. His name was Crazy Will Hawkins, and hardly a day went by that Crazy Will did not have to go to the principal's office for having done something stupid.

After he came out of the principal's office, we would all gather around to ask him what happened. Instead of being ashamed, he always seemed rather proud of what he had done. He and Bill Clinton are two of a kind.

One of the reporters asked Clinton if he was interested in being pardoned for any alleged crimes in the Monica Lewinsky scandal and Whitewater investigation.

He said, "I'm not interested." But Clinton did not say whether he would accept a pardon if it were offered by his successor. When pressed further he said, "The answer is, I have no interest in it. I wouldn't ask for it, I don't think it would be necessary. I am prepared to stand before any bar of justice I have to stand before" (translation: "I would take it in a heart beat").

Clinton remains under a legal cloud despite being acquitted of perjury and obstruction charges by the Senate last year after his impeachment by the House.

Independent council Robert Ray, who succeeded Kenneth Starr in the Whitewater and Lewinsky cases, has said he has hired additional prosecutors and was considering whether to indict Clinton after he leaves office.

The president angrily called the Whitewater investigation "a lie and a fraud from the beginning" in spite of the fact that 26 people have been convicted who were involved with him and Hillary in the Whitewater matter. Many more are still under investigation.

The loony liberals rejoiced when Ken Starr left, but before it is over they may be begging Starr to come back. They wouldn't dare try to assassinate Independent Robert Ray with "that right wing conspiracy."

They were that one out and so now Mr. Slack Willie and Hillary will just have to face the music, because they have played all their cards.

Welcome to the real world.

Put Chesapeake on a new course

Next month is a good time to put Chesapeake on a new course. The decision for mayor will do this for the residents of this fine city.

Mayor Ward has been on the City Council for 22 years, of which 10 were as mayor and for this we thank you. However, I believe after you get tunnel vision, and I believe, an unproductive attitude.

It is quite obvious over Mayor Ward's tenure that if you do not agree with him then you become the enemy. He has had falling outs with numerous councilpersons and a lot of them are not now on the council. It is one thing to have problems once in a while with one or two persons, but Mayor Ward is ongoing.

The growth issue Mayor Ward (supports) has been against putting anything in place to control growth. It took a referendum by the citizens, and then even

No 'teamwork' here

I recently read where the "D.E.W. Team" (City Council candidates Dean, Erb and Weeks) obviously don't have the "team spirit" inasmuch as two of the three members have refused to sign a Candidates Code of Ethics for the May elections. The third member has agreed to sign. The trio sure can spend a lot of money as a team for signs and ads, but can't seem to agree on ethical campaign conduct!

Virginia Beach city government gets 'B+' on 'report card'

In a news release Jan. 31, the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University and Governing Magazine reported that the Landmark Nationwide Study of City Government Management gave

The Mayor's Report

Mayor Meyer Oberndorf

Governing Magazine's February 2000 issue, and is considered to be the most comprehensive survey of city government management ever completed.

It was stated by Patricia W. Ingraham, director of the Government Performance project at the Maxwell School that, "This study provides city leaders with tools to identify what's working and what is not in city management. City leaders and citizens have never had access to the kind of information this independent analysis provides. With this report, leaders can strengthen the critical connection between good management and good government."

In the five critical areas graded, Virginia Beach received an A- in financial management; A- in capital management; B in human resources; B in information technology; and a B in managing for results, making an overall grade average of B+.

Under financial management, it was stated that Virginia Beach had one of the strongest rainy days funds around, spelling out, by written rule, the minimum and maximum balances. The study also pointed out that that form City Council action is required for use of the reserve; that the city had solid investment policies; pays close attention to the fiscal impacts of current actions and has been increasingly accurate with forecasts as the economy stabilized. This A- was one of only five in the "A" range among the 35 cities evaluated.

Capital management in Virginia Beach government also received an A- and was praised for preparing its Capital Improvement Plan (CIP) as if someone was going to read it. It was considered to be the "most informative and well-organized ones around." The CIP is based on an annually updated six-year capital improvement program, with a one-year budget. The study found that in the past Virginia Beach hadn't been particularly strong at evaluating the condition of existing facilities, but it has begun a five-year project to correct that situation.

It was stated by Patricia W. Ingraham, director of the Government Performance project at the Maxwell School that, "This study provides city leaders with tools to identify what's working and what is not in city management.

Human resources received a "B." It was noted that the city communicated well with employees and in seeking their feedback. Virginia Beach has an active staff suggestion program and much of the feedback comes by way of e-mail. Virginia Beach is looking into upgrading the Human Resources system.

Information technology (IT) received a "B." A new IT director was brought in for overseeing daily operations, while the existing director was promoted to the CIO position and will be dealing with strategic issues, not the day-to-day operating issues. He will be developing the city's first genuinely strategic long-range plan.

Managing for results received a "B" because of the successful effort the city makes at keeping a variety of independently appointed department heads involved in managing-for-results initiatives. Because the department heads are shown that they are a part of the solution, they are more readily willing to participate.

The city has a five-year-long strategic planning process that is updated constantly and is moving toward effective use of measures to inform its decision-making process. Tabulating the five scores is how the B+ grade average was determined.

Out of the 35 cities graded, only two cities graded higher than Virginia Beach — Phoenix, Ariz. with an "A" and Austin, Tex. with an "A." Two cities — Indianapolis, Ind. and Minneapolis, Minn. — tied Virginia Beach with a "B+."

We can all be proud not only of the job being done in Virginia Beach but also of the fact that the results have been noticed and publically acknowledged by others.

Beach gears up for Boardwalk Art Show

Celebrates 45 years June 15-18

Looking to spruce up your surroundings with original, yet affordable art, handcrafted by world-class artisans? Get out of the house and hit the beach. Virginia Beach will host hundreds of world-class sculptors, painters, photographers and craftsmen for the 45th annual Boardwalk Art Show, June 15-18.

This four-day extravaganza is billed as one of the best outdoor art shows in the country.

The event is produced by the Contemporary Art Center of Virginia, the only facility in Southeastern Virginia focusing on contemporary art.

Artists competing for $24,000 in prizes will be showcased along a 14-block stretch of the newly renovated Virginia Beach oceanfront boardwalk, with visual and performing arts presented daily against a natural backdrop of surf, sun and sand.

The juried show is considered a prestigious proving ground among artists, and exhibit space is limited. Consistently rated as one of the very best art shows by national travel and arts organizations, the Virginia Beach Boardwalk Art Show was recognized by Sunshine magazine and attracts art lovers from throughout the mid-Atlantic region.

Judging this year's show are Ann Roth, curator of Gallery of Art and Design, North Carolina State University in Raleigh, N.C.; Maurine Littleton of Maureen Littleton Gallery in Washington, D.C.; and Sidney Lawrence, Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden in Washington, D.C.

This year's show coincides with the arrival of June 16 of OpSail 2000, a flotilla of majestic Class A tall ships complemented by 150 Class B & C ships from more than 60 nations. OpSail 2000, a celebration of America's maritime history, will sail into Virginia Beach as part of an eight-city tour along the East Coast and will remain in the Hampton Roads region through June 20. The magnificent Parade of Sail, billed as the largest tall ship and maritime event in history, is expected to draw thousands of visitors who will delight in the opportunity to enjoy a nationally-recognized outdoor art show and festival during the weekend.

During Boardwalk Art Show weekend, the seaside 24th Street Park and stage hosts an eclectic mix of performing artists to complement the visual works on display. All performances are free and open to the public.

The 45th annual Virginia Beach Boardwalk Art Show takes place June 15-18 between 17th Street and 31st Street on the boardwalk and is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday, June 15, and from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday through Sunday.

For art festival information call 425-0000 or visit the Boardwalk Art Show section of www.cbavc.org. For reservations call 1-800-VA-BEACH (1-800-822-3224).

Judith Allison: A heart for loving

By Victoria Hecht
Editor

Judith Allison has never broken down the numbers, but if she had, she'd know she volunteered an average of 53.8 hours per week last year for the Citizens' Committee to Protect the Elderly.

And she did that on top of holding a full-time job as realtor with Rose and Womble and teaching yoga lessons on the side.

The source of her boundless energy is the simple belief that "we can all give love."

Last week the Virginia Beach woman was honored by VOLUNTEER Hampton Roads during its annual Achievement Awards dinner, just one of two individuals from the resort city lauded for their efforts.

Allison is one of the founding members of the Virginia Beach-based Citizens' Committee to Protect the Elderly (CCPE), organized four years ago. It provides assistance and support to nursing home and assisted-living facility residents throughout the greater Hampton Roads area. Allison is president of the CCPE board and serves as volunteer director of community relations.

CCPE was founded by individuals who felt it was time for a change in the way nursing and assisted-living facilities are run, from how residents are treated to the patient/staff ratio.

"I started with the whole idea being this was a citizens' group — a grassroots group — with no allegiance to anyone," Allison said.

As a volunteer visitor, Allison knows the critical need for individuals to visit the elderly in nursing and assisted-living homes. Weeks, months, even years pass by before some residents receive visitors.

Allison feels it simply shouldn't be this way. She visits up to four residents of these facilities each week. Plus, as volunteer director of community relations, she plans activities and community service projects for local facilities. The cause is a personal one, too. Allison's mother resides in a nursing home, and she is more comfortable knowing her mom is visited and taken care of well.

But others aren't so fortunate. Often, Allison meets citizens who must place a family member in a nursing or assisted care facility with just 24 hours of notice. CCPE is there to provide a list of homes and centers, answer questions and be a liaison for the family.

"You need to know what kinds of questions to ask. Sometimes you don't even know what your rights are. You may be shoved into place where the hospital urged you to go. You must be armed with the right questions — you want to go in as a savvy consumer or informed consumer," she said.

Allison speaks about CCPE's work with passion — not unexpected for someone who donated 2,800 hours in the organization last year.

"We get calls from people who say they have to visit their loved ones every day to make sure they're fed and changed," she said, noting families often call on CCPE to provide some respite visitation. "We have lists of people who need visitors."

These "forgotten" adults, Allison continued, benefit from someone coming by just to say hello. Allison urges groups like the Boy Scouts and Brownies to adopt homes or individuals.

"I feel we owe it to the older generations. They are survivors. They made it through the Depression and world wars — and now they may sit for hours needing to be changed."

In some facilities, she said, understaffing is so severe that there are sometimes only two caregivers to look after 60 residents. Allison would like to see the same caregiver-to-resident ratio in nursing and assisted-living facilities as apply to children's day care providers.

Allison remembers one touching story of a CCPE volunteer who leaned down to kiss a patient on the cheek. As he pulled away, he saw the woman had tears in her eyes. Afraid that he had offended her, the volunteer apologized. It turned out the woman was so grateful because she hadn't been kissed in 20 years.

Allison is uplifted when visiting residents in nursing and assisted-living facilities. She fondly recalled one 95-year-old genealogist who was "lucid" to the end and countless others who impacted her life.

She shares her volunteer activities with other organizations, too, including The Dwelling Place (a family shelter in Norfolk), and Edmarc Hospice for terminally ill children. For six years she served as a court-appointed special advocate for abused children in Virginia Beach, and she originated the "Over the Wall" prison rehabilitation program, now in its 28th year.

"Imagine the impact one caring person can have," Allison said.

It's not difficult to imagine — she is living proof.

What brought you to this area: Intuition and destiny.

Hometown: Petersburg.

Age: When I was 21, my best friend, Olive Landers (in her 90s), told me that a woman never reveals her age to anyone because people tend to typecast you.

Marital Status: Married to a very understanding man, Gary Allison.

Favorite restaurants: Anything vegetarian — Nawab, Mayflower Café, Eurasia, Coastal Grill (Hilltop).

Favorite meal and beverage: Homemade soup and homemade 12-grain bread, and mango lassi, a homemade yogurt-based drink made at Nawab.

What most people don't know about me: I am very mischievous.

Best thing about myself: My deep faith in God and the goodness of others; a positive nature that includes flexibility of body, mind and spirit.

Worst habit: Trying to add "one more thing" into my schedule.

Pets: Everyone's favorite 86th Street neighborhood dog, Layla.

Pet peeves: People who are unkind to others; anyone who harms children or the elderly in any way.

First job: Clerking at S.S. Kresge's department store in Petersburg while in high school.

Least liked job: None. I have learned something important from every single one.

Favorite sports team: All those my son, Sean, played basketball for.

Favorite musicians: Puccini (any of his operas), Richard Wagner and The Holy Model Rounders (folk musicians).

Most embarrassing moment: Once, while showing a property, I accidentally set off my car alarm and didn't know how to turn it off. My client and I sat down and read the book until we found the answer.

How I would like to be remembered: As someone who shared her song with others and helped lift them a little closer to the light.

If I received $1 million: I would fund the Citizens' Committee to Protect the Elderly: hire nurses and coordinators for each Hampton Roads city; set up Adopt-A-Nursing-Home programs for all 43 nursing homes and 111 assisted-living facilities, partnering with schools, churches, temples and businesses.

If I had 10 minutes on national television: I would ask people to make a commitment to volunteer to help in their community. Everyone has some gift to give to others. I would offer lists of options to help them choose a project. A wise man once said, "The only way we get to heaven is leaning on the arm of someone we once helped."

Beach sets up for volleyball May

Visitors can dig their heels into the sand and observe plenty of action-packed slamming as Virginia Beach hosts two women's May volleyball tournaments: the fifth annual Virginia Beach Invitational Girls Volleyball Tournament and the Oldsmobile Alero Beach Volleyball Series Tournament, which is a qualifying event for the Olympics.

The fifth annual Virginia Beach Invitational Girls Volleyball Tournament, May 13-14, brings some of the best volleyball on the East Coast and is the largest volleyball tournament in Virginia. Sanctioned by USA Volleyball and Old Dominion Region Volleyball Association and sponsored by the Tidewater Volleyball Association and the city of Virginia Beach, tournament organizers expect more than 120 teams from across the country — including New York, Florida and 13 Tidewater teams — along with 2,500 athletes, parents, college recruiters and spectators.

The tournament is divided into six age groups — ages 13 through 18 — and includes two open divisions. Volleyball format is wave play and features morning pool, afternoon pool, challenge match, divisional playoff pool and single elimination bracket play. Matches will be played on 22 courts at the Tidewater Volleyball Center and local schools.

For more information about the fifth annual Virginia Beach Invitational Girls Volleyball Tournament, call the Tidewater Volleyball Association at 498-5052 or visit the website at www.spike.net.

For its second season, The Oldsmobile Alero Beach Volleyball Series Tournament will return to the oceanfront at Virginia Beachon Memorial Day weekend, May 26-28, with more than 20 women's two-person teams vying for $100,000 in prize money and enough points to be nominated for international competition. The official U.S. Olympic Challenge Event will be held on four beach volleyball courts at 5th Street with matches beginning at 9 a.m. daily. Competitors include internationally-known players such as Gabrielle Reece, Barbara Fontana, Holly McPeak, Annett Buckner-Davis, Linda Arce, Nancy Reno and Elaine Youngs.

This tournament is the second of three stops on the 2000 Oldsmobile Alero Beach Volleyball — U.S. Olympic Challenge Series circuit, developed in partnership with USA Volleyball (USAV) and the United States Olympic Committee (USOC).

Rankings are based on a player's results in their five most recent Alero and FIVB (Federation Internationale de Volleyball) Beach Volleyball World Tour events played during the preceding 12-month period.

These rankings determine who will represent the United States in international competitions, including the 2000 Sydney Olympic Games, the 2001 Goodwill Games, and the 2003 Pan American Games.

and clocks — all made from eggs. The tiniest finch eggs to biggest ostrich eggs are used, though her favorite for versatility is the goose egg.

Some may wonder which came first — the chicken or the egg? But Farber doesn't; it's always the egg. Especially with her projects.

"We get the eggs from hatcheries, where they breed the animals for food and sell off the infertile eggs. We use them and don't have to blow 'em out and clean 'em up. They come nice and clean. It takes a lot of work to blow an egg," she explained.

Once she has the egg, it's an empty canvas for Farber to consider. Should it be a clock or diorama, perfume dispenser or kaleidoscope?

"You can do just about anything with an egg, in addition to eating it," Farber quipped.

This particular day, sitting in her Greenbrier-based studio, she's working on an exquisitely intricate Cinderella's coach, bedecked with hundreds of crystals. When complete, it will be pulled by swans and a tiny Cinderella will sit inside. And after 35 to 45 hours of work, this spectacular creation will get for $650 to $850.

It's an "eggs-acting" art, but the shells are surprisingly harder than one would expect. After a few coats of paint and enamel, in fact, they are pretty sturdy — though Farber doesn't suggest dropping an egg just to test the theory.

But not chicken eggs. They are pretty delicate, she confirmed.

"Sometimes they don't make it home from the grocery store," she noted.

Egg art is Farber's hobby and profession, consuming her time from morning until night. She calls herself an "egger," the lingo for artists like herself. There are several in the area, she said, and they get together for "socials" much like quilters enjoy their bees.

Eggers take pride in their art, which Farber said can be traced back to the days of the pharaohs. Many countries have egg traditions — the Chinese give red eggs to wedding couples for fertility, for example. And, of course, most people are familiar with Faberge eggs, though Farber says they're not real eggs at all.

"He didn't use real egg shells," she laughed, although not everyone realizes that.

Farber, who teaches classes in her art and is a member of the International Egg Art Guild, is fascinated with the medium in which she works. In fact, she will have an impressive display of "naked eggs" on display at the museum.

The collection of 24 natural eggs includes all shapes, sizes and colors are a Cassowary egg with a textured light green appearance, and an emu egg whose greenish tint is so dark it resembles black granite.

Never too old for Arbor Day

Atria Virginia Beach, a local assisted-living community, celebrated National Arbor Day by planting a new dogwood tree on the facility's grounds. Arbor Day was first conceived by J. Sterling Morton, editor of Nebraska's first newspaper. He tirelessly advocated planting trees on the grasslands of his adopted state to provide early settlers with fuel, food, building material, windbreaks and shade. In 1872, Arbor Day became a state holiday in Nebraska. By 1894, it was celebrated in every state and has since spread to other countries. Atria Virginia Beach's new logo is a tree. It represents the Atria resident who has lived a long life and yet is still highly productive, as shown by the green leaves and bearing of fruit. Taking part in the tree planting are Atria resident Norman Walters and activities director Maria Lazo.

Familiar voice becomes familiar face at concert

Dr. Raymond Jones, vice president of public radio services for WHRO, will narrate and make his conducting debut at the Virginia Beach Symphony Orchestra's last subscription concert of the 1999-2000 season.

The concert will be held at the Virginia Beach Pavilion Theatre Sunday, May 7 at 7:30 p.m.

The program will include performances of Haydn's "And God Created Great Whales," Copland's "Rodeo" and "Lincoln Portrait," narrated by Jones. Also, Vivaldi's "Double Cello Concerto" will be performed by Mary Tanner and Marguerite Alley, the Virginia Beach Symphony's co-principal cellists.

Jones has been in the broadcasting business for more than 35 years, making numerous contributions to the local public broadcasting business. Not only was he instrumental in helping start the area's first public radio station, WTGM in Norfolk (later to become WHRO), but he founded the Chesapeake city/schools cable TV station, ACC 40.

As an educator, Jones taught in the Virginia Beachand Chesapeake school systems. He has held adjunct faculty positions with Christopher Newport College and the University of Virginia.

Cellist Tanner is the orchestra director at Frank W. Cox and Princess Anne high schools in Virginia Beach. She also teaches beginning strings at various elementary schools.

Cellist Alley is the director of orchestra at First Colonial High School, several elementary schools and teaches cello privately in her home. In addition to teaching, she has performed with various musical groups including the Virginia Symphony, the Evening Chamber Trio and the Norfolk Savoyards and has been the principal cellist for several orchestras including the Petersburg Symphony.

Tickets, which are $10 for adults and $8 for senior/students, may be obtained at the Pavilion Theatre box office or by calling the Virginia Beach Symphony office, 671-8611.

While they received the agricultural award for being good farmers, they also are active in the community and have contributed significantly to their profession.

"They pay attention to detail," said Louis Cullipher, director of the Virginia Beach Department of Agriculture. "They do everything they are supposed to do."

While many farmers are losing their land after suffering financial losses over the past several years, the Whites have been able to hang on through innovation.

They became one of the largest grain-producing farms in the area and developed a niche market, selling the seed under their own name, Cullipher acknowledged. They maximize their resources and use cutting edge farming techniques, he said.

That may be because White Jr. takes his job very seriously. He explained that farming isn't just about planting and harvesting.

"You not only have to be an excellent grower, but an excellent marketer as well," he noted. "You have to be a business man."

White Jr. says that so many variables are outside the control of the farmer that he has to stay on top of everything from the weather to the government agriculture reports.

He also stays well connected in the farming industry. The Whites are active members of the Corn and Soybean Association, Virginia Seedman, Virginia Beach Farm Bureau and Virginia Crop Improvement Association.

White Jr. is now largely in charge of the family farm since his father started losing his eyesight from diabetes about 16 years ago. However, White Sr. can often be found putting around the barn.

While the White family has been farming for four generations, the elder of the duo isn't hopeful that they'll be able to pass the business down to his grandchildren.

"If it ain't in your blood, you're crazy to farm," said White Sr.

He stated that at one time farmers could make a good living off the land, but now they are unable to get any money for their products.

His son still has a small glimmer of hope that this year will be different from the last few.

With a drought expected in the Midwest this year, the Whites just might be able to make a decent profit from their crops with some of the competition out of the way. "It's good news for us, but bad news for them," White Jr. said.

"You hate to wish bad things on somebody," he sympathized.

However, he admitted that because the Midwest farmers enjoyed three good years in a row, he feels it's now time for this region's farmers to reap their reward.

luary," explained Erica Schaubach. "We collected leaves, and seeds, and we measured the trees, and drew them."

"It was really fun trying to find animals — learning where they live, and stuff," said Brittany Agrillo.

"I think the best part of it was the drawing," said Caitlyn Bennis. "We got to draw all the trees, and we really learned a lot."

Classmate Simone Hughes disagreed. "The most fun part of the project," she asserted, "was getting to look through the binoculars!" Kimberly Maron shared a depressing experience.

"Once, I was digging under a tree, trying to find a turtle that lives in our garden," she recalled. "By the time I was finished, my hands were all dirty, and prickly, and it didn't feel very good at all."

Chelsea Caplin put the final spin on the project.

"I just think that this project was really cool," she said. "We learned a lot by walking through the garden. The children can learn from everything, even a dirt pile. Every few years, NASA changes the programs for the kids to adapt to current issues. Right now, they don't think that children spend enough time on environmental science," said Holden. "Therefore, they have children doing such things as measuring the pH level in water, and collecting leaf evidence."

"I think that the kids were surprised that so many things live in the meadow, like snakes. They were really upset that the meadow may be destroyed soon to make room for the parking lot. The kids certainly enjoyed being outside.

Being in class for so long, they missed more than 1,200 entries to the competitions. Students engage in research that promotes critical-thinking, problem-solving, communication and collaboration skills.

Student entries were judged at NASA centers by teams of scientists, engineers, educators, journalists and other professionals, who selected first, second and third-place winners.

LEADING TEACHER. Janey Holden helped guide the Cape Henry students through their entries in the national NASA competition.

IT'S YOUR RIGHT AND DUTY

Each vote counts

"There is but one unconditional commandment, which is that we should seek incessantly with fear and trembling, so to vote and act as to bring about the very largest total universe of which we can see."

— William James, philosopher

In the United States, people are quick to defend or criticize the vote, but less eager to exercise this inalienable right.

Few among us can say that we have voted in every election for which we have been eligible. For those who have, please accept a resounding round of applause.

Isn't it ironic, however, that those who least frequently exercise their franchise are the ones who grumble incessantly about the outcome of the election?

On Tuesday voters across Hampton Roads will have the opportunity to elect City Council members, who will form their municipality's laws and policies, and School Board members who will shape the programs, policies and facilities to which our children are entrusted. They'll vote on referendums which will decide the fate of public properties and transportation issues which could affect us all.

Unfortunately, local elections — those which have the most impact on our lives and wallets — see one of the lowest turnouts, just a third of the turnout to presidential elections.

Whether choosing the fate of a City Council or School Board, these are not inconsequential decisions. Although local elections lack the charisma of the presidential election, which we will also face in November, they are important nonetheless.

Consider your choices judiciously and vote your mind. Then you can say that you make a difference. — V.E.H.

Making room for baby number two

Spring is a time of rebirth, which makes it only appropriate that I now let the cat out of the bag: Baby number two is on the way.

Now the process starts all over again—love and nurture a baby and watch him or her grow into an adult.

It's a daunting thought when you put it that way, but also a pleasant one. Evan and I are looking forward to the challenge, though I admit we do dread the impending lack of sleep.

Having a second child brings back memories of baby number one, Mitchell, who in my eyes is still a "baby" though a very energetic 18 months old. He's going to be a big brother, no small job either.

Of course, I'm reliving the morning sickness again, though again it's late afternoon and evening sickness. I'm ravenous in the morning and at lunchtime, but the thought of food after 5 p.m. is...well, quite unpleasant.

Then there are the cravings. With Mitchell I yearned for Italian food, V-8 and salads. This time I don't want to set eyes on a plate of spaghetti, but some fried oysters sound mighty good. Tuna fish sandwiches are another craving, and I can't get enough soup (particularly those made with chicken broth). I wonder what one's cravings say about her?

With pregnancy came fatigue, too, and both times I've been wiped out after 5 p.m. When the workday ends, all I want to do is vegetate—not easy when you're chasing around a toddler.

I'm 11 weeks now, almost to the end of the first trimester, so fortunately all these symptoms should disappear soon. That's when we'll get down to the real business of planning for another baby.

Having a second child brings back memories of baby number one Mitchell, who in my eyes is still a "baby."

And what plans there are! This time, unlike with Mitchell, I'm sure we'll find out the sex of the baby ahead of time. That way we can plan the nursery.

There will be things to buy, like a new double stroller, clothes, diapers and other necessities.

But, more importantly, we have to prepare ourselves for the mindset of parenting two children. One is a challenge; two is even more of a challenge.

There are many things to consider — all the little logistics that go into carrying out life. What time to drop the children off at the babysitter? How do you handle those two youngsters at once? How do you deal with the inevitable jealousies that will arise when the older child sees the attention the baby is getting? What ways can the older child be a "helper" to Mom and Dad with the younger one? How do you make the older child feel important?

I'm sure these are questions that parents have asked for time eternal and will continue to ask. Only this time it's our turn to deal with them. I'll admit this is going to be a wild ride holding down a job, running a household and raising two children. But I know millions of mothers do it every day. I will learn from their example.

So baby number two, you are on your way. Now Mom and Dad just have to get ready for the arrival of your sweet fate. Thanks goodness we still have six months!

Letters to the editor

Forget light rail; hop on the bus

Editor:

If councilman Gene Waters is successful in his efforts to bring light rail to Chesapeake, he may rob Chesapeake merchants of their business from North Carolina and send it to MacArthur Mall.

His proposals include light rail from the North Carolina border to MacArthur Mall, bypassing stops inside the Greenbrier retail area.

I suggest that the merchants and Chamber of Commerce in Chesapeake join to defeat the present light rail study and any further studies of what could be as expensive as the estimated $900 million Virginia Beach-Norfolk light rail line.

What our merchants need is a bus route between North Carolina and Greenbrier. It can provide the North Carolinians comfortable, cheap transportation without the worry of parking a long distance from the doors of our shops. This route can protect our business with our North Carolina friends, and jobs in our local retail market.

We need new 'vision'

Editor:

I have known Joe Newman for a number of years. I know his wife and his two daughters well. We need this type of leadership and vision as mayor. I believe he will help lead us into a great future not just spend his time winding down going into retirement. I heard someone say, "It's time for a change." I believe it is now.

Callie Koonce

Mowing could mean tragedy

Editor:

I am one of the many businessmen who visit our area regularly to call on clients in the Greenbrier and Cavalier areas. As such, I have had an opportunity over the past year or so to observe a dramatic deterioration in one of the basic (but simple and observable) city services — cutting the grass on median strips and shoulders.

In Columbia, S.C., we have a clean-up campaign each spring to attract business and keep our streets safe. In Chesapeake I observe the opposite — even to the degree that individual citizens are beginning to cut medians. They drag their mowers across several lanes of moving traffic without flaggers, "mowing" signs or crash cushions. I think it's just a matter of time before Chesapeake will have to answer bereaving family members who will ask why they let the grass go. I understand from business associates that the city is actually breaking its own grass laws in some areas.

From reading your paper it appears you support business development. If so, please call attention to this problem.

R. Lynn Scott
Columbia, S.C.

It's all about our children

Editor:

I vote "Yes, Yes, Yes!" to putting Dr. Ella P. Ward on the Chesapeake School Board. For starters, Ella's experience as an assistant principal provides her with hands-on knowledge of what is happening in our schools. Plus, she became an assistant principal the only way anyone should, by first establishing herself as a master teacher in the classroom.

Then there is her resume which is so chock full of post-graduate degrees that no one can doubt she practices what she preaches to her students: "Education is the only key to our future, individually and collectively."

But, most of all, there is Ella herself. Her common sense judgment and uncanny capacity to effectively communicate with others make this dynamic, intelligent lady precisely what our School Board needs above all else.

It's true dollars in the Chesapeake City budget are tight, but that is all the more reason why we need School Board members that know how to set the right priorities for the dollars we do spend.

It is high time our children had an effective advocate in a position where that advocacy can make a real difference. We have found that advocate in Dr. Ward. Now all the rest of us have to do is to make certain she wins a board seat on May 2.

Dr. Roderie Taylor
Chesapeake

Vote 'yes' to study rail

Every so often we get the chance to do something important for the children of our children. What kind of world do we wish for them — one in which they are immobilized and choking on carbonized fumes? Of course not.

But that is exactly where Hampton Roads is heading if we don't decrease the epidemic levels of carbon monoxide we are pouring into our atmosphere from automotive emissions. One doesn't have to be a meteorologist to know that already the industrialized world has begun to reek havoc on the earth's delicate balance; or that the threat to our planet if we don't arrest global warming is very real indeed.

Perspectives

By Eileen Huey,
columnist

The early warning signs of weather extremes, including the increased flooding and other natural disasters which the scientists predicted would occur if we don't reduce greenhouse gases, are already upon us.

So isn't it about time we at least studied the viability of light rail, and every other means by which we can reduce the amount of carbon monoxide our region emits into the stratosphere as our populations continues to steadily grow?

Such a study is long overdue. Twenty years ago we should have been mapping out a strategy on how mass transit would serve our region. But just because we didn't wake up and smell the coffee then is no reason to not do so now.

The citizens of Chesapeake will have a chance to do just that when they go to the polls on May 2. A federally-funded study to investigate the viability of light rail as a feasible option for Chesapeake is theirs for the asking.

So why is there a referendum on the ballot? Surely, no one could object to a free study aimed at providing information on this mass transit option? It is not as if Chesapeake is making a commitment to build a light rail system, only to study how one might work to serve the community.

Why, indeed! Councilman Alan Krasnoff, an opponent of light rail (and many other past measures to modernize Chesapeake's infrastructure), used his position on City Council to put the question of whether the city should go forward with this study on the ballot. Only he conveniently forgot to tell the voters that the study was at no expense to them.

Plus, Krasnoff worded the referendum so confusingly that the uninformed voter, which is the typical voter in these low visibility May elections, is likely to believe that they are voting for or against light rail, with a possible tax increase to fund it.

Without the study and full public hearings, it is absurd to even be voting on such an important issue, one way or the other. Councilman Krasnoff is undoubtedly counting on the usual low voter turnout and lack of information on the referendum to self-defeat Chesapeake's chance to participate in the federally-funded light rail system planned for Norfolk and other outlying areas. It certainly makes one wonder what on earth the opponents of the light rail study are afraid of — if it's a bad idea, the study will only verify their position.

There is also a danger that last year's highly publicized light rail referendum in which the citizens of Virginia Beach rejected a commitment to build a light rail system will increase the likelihood that Chesapeake voters will view this referendum in that same light instead of merely an approval for a no-cost study.

The citizens of Chesapeake must not be deceived by efforts of the opponents of light rail to cloud the issue. A study just makes sense and it would be foolish to pass up an opportunity to become fully appraised of the costs and benefits a more environmentally-friendly means of transmitting people throughout our region could provide.

The last model the citizens of Chesapeake should ever follow is that of their neighbors at the Beach. Virginia Beach is still suffering from its lack of foresight to plan for adequate roads and other infrastructure to support their growth boom.

Now that it's Chesapeake's turn to grow at breakneck speed, its residents should avoid the "pretend it's not happening mentality" so characteristic of the Beach's voters who always end up bearing the consequences of being a day late and a dollar short.

A "yes" vote on the light rail study is the only rational vote a concerned citizen can cast on May 2. Even if the study wasn't free, we have a moral obligation to at least investigate every possible solution for decreasing the amount of pollutants we emit into the stratosphere.

But, it is free. So, there is no excuse for even the least public-minded of our citizens to deny those who care about our city's long-range future the information upon which the city can make a sound decision on whether a light rail mass transit system makes sense for Chesapeake or not.

A little humor to make tax paying easier

When the final day came for you to mail your 1999 income taxes, I hope you had enough left to pay the postage. Just remember this: It is much better to make enough money to have to pay taxes than to be faced with the alternative.

This is the time of year when many of our best joke tellers do take offs on taxes, like the one who wrote that the Internal Revenue Service doesn't need all those forms. He says they only need one short form that asks but one question: "How much money did you make last year?" Send it in.

Let's take a look of the thoughts others have on taxes. Congress is worried about lowering taxes for fear it could establish a dangerous precedent — the right of people to keep their own money.

■ A fair tax structure would be one that gives every taxpayer an equal opportunity to cheat.

■ Let's face it. Nowadays, America's favorite pastime is tax evasion.

■ I blame it all on the IRS...income tax has made liars out of more people than golf.

■ I put six of my wife's relatives down under contributions. I defy the government to prove that they are not an organized charity.

■ My accountant can come up with so many deductions you'll wind up with enough to post bail.

■ I did some figuring on my own. We can soon balance the federal budget if we close 27 states.

■ A communist country won't let you make much money, a Democratic government will let you make all you want, but won't let you keep it.

■ When the new tax reform bill goes through, we will no longer be treated unfairly by the old tax laws — we'll be treated unfairly by the new laws.

How residents will benefit from an expanded Pavilion

If you are like most Virginia Beach residents, you've probably been to the Pavilion for a high school graduation, a garden show, a musical or any one of thousands of events that have been held there since the facility was built in 1980.

The Mayor's Report

Mayor Meyer Oberdorf

An expansion that includes top quality amenities could generate tax revenue from as many as 124,000 additional hotel room nights and hundreds of thousands of additional restaurant meals per year, as well as, increased fees from rentals and concessions.

failed to grow and modernize to meet community needs. That's why a steering committee of 30 concerned citizens is exploring ways to expand the facility to meet growing community demands and attract more revenue producing conventions to help pay for the expansion.

Virginia Beach resident Robert Goodman is chairing the steering committee. He has enjoyed many events at the Pavilion theater and has been interested in the project for years. He believes that the expansion is one of the most important capital investments the city can make.

"The Pavilion has served us well, but it's worn out," said Goodman, "and it's only about one-third the size we need. It's too small for our community, which has more than doubled in population, or our tourist industry, which has also doubled."

"We have a chance to do something great for our city and for our children: to give them a building they'll be proud of and to provide a better quality facility, which will increase our economic base. That means more money for other city needs. It's a triple win. We get a nicer facility for local use, the city gets more tax revenue, and we can attract more conventions."

Many cities around the country are investing in the construction or expansion of their convention facilities because economic impact studies have demonstrated the wisdom of such investment. Goodman emphasizes the need for Virginia Beach to build a quality facility that is on par with facilities in other cities, such as Savannah, Charlotte and Myrtle Beach, where recent convention center projects are attracting top dollar conventions that pass Virginia Beach by.

The 20-year-old Pavilion lacks modern technology, first class furnishings, and the large exhibition space and ballroom demanded by most conventions. An expansion that includes top quality amenities could generate tax revenue from as many as 124,000 additional hotel room nights and hundreds of thousands of additional restaurant meals per year, as well as, increased fees from rentals and concessions.

Cities that have expanded their convention centers have benefited from an increase in tax revenues and from an increased private investment in new or upgraded hotels, entertainment venues, and other facilities. Mike Ezell is a senior principal and chief designer for Thompson Ventulett Stainback and Associates in Atlanta. His firm has worked on some of the largest convention center projects in the country in cities like Washington, Philadelphia and Miami.

They are currently working on conceptual designs for the Pavilion project. He can attest to the increase in upscale facilities that have resulted from convention center projects.

Ezell said, "Hotels will step up to the plate to address the market. There's excellent potential on the Pavilion site to build anything the community wants."

Recent citizen surveys and focus groups have indicated that residents consider the Pavilion to be an important community resource and understand the need for expansion.

Jim Ricketts, director of our Department of Convention and Visitor Development says, "This expansion makes sense because it will allow our residents to enjoy bigger and better events, and we'll be able to pay for the facility in part with revenue from the increased number of conventions."

The Pavilion over the past four years has brought in a net median rate of return of 44 percent. With an expansion, we would get a return on investment and a first class facility for our residents, as well as our visitors, to enjoy."

The timing of this expansion couldn't be better. We're at a crossroads and not only do we not want to be left behind, we want to keep step with the times and the other cities in the region. In order to do that, the time to expand the Pavilion is now.

The Department of Convention and Visitor Development contributed to this column.

City co-sponsors Earth Day 2000 activities

The city of Virginia Beach will co-sponsor Earth Day 2000 with the city of Norfolk, the Navy, plus promotional sponsors GoHampton-Roads.com, HRT and Traffic, at Mount Trashmore Park on Sunday, May 7 from noon until 7 p.m. The 162-acre park, the first landfill park in the world, has helped establish the city of Virginia Beach as an environmentally-concerned community.

"We are proud to have Earth Day in our city and celebrate the event in a regional effort to preserve and protect one of our most precious resources, the earth itself," said Mayor Meyer E. Oberdorf. While Earth Day generally draws between 10,000 and 20,000 people a year, organizers anticipate a turnout of 30,000 for the 30th anniversary of the event.

Live entertainment, environmental exhibits, interactive displays, crafts, games and food will offer something for every family member and Mount Trashmore is an ideal setting for the event. Typically, Earth Day attracts groups and families who come to learn about the environment while having fun. One of the attractions is the ECO Trail, which provides guests an opportunity to learn about various environmental technologies, activities and efforts within Hampton Roads, across America and around the world.

A. Leland Simmons: Carving a reputation

By Victoria Hecht
Editor

TowneBank's well-known senior vice president of lending, A. Leland Simmons has made a name for himself thanks to an astute business sense. But the banker has also carved a reputation as an award-winning artist specializing in wildlife, landscapes and seascapes.

A series of his detailed renderings of antique wooden decoys is even captured on notecards for Ducks Unlimited, one of his favorite causes.

Simmons began both careers about the same time — after returning to the area following military service during the Vietnam War.

"I'm probably more on the artistic side than the banking side. I've never even taken a business or math course. I've learned it on the job," he admitted.

After studying literature at the University of Georgia, Simmons taught a semester at Old Dominion University while pursuing his master's degree. He was called to service by the Navy, and after returning from the war, had lost his call to teach.

Charting a new course for his life, he went to work for Bank of Virginia and has been in the banking industry ever since.

He admits his passion for art had a somewhat fortuitous beginning. Simmons started to experiment with his creative side when a friend was moving and gave him a set of paints that had never been opened. Without any formal training, he picked up a brush and has been refining his technique ever since.

Within a few years, his work was on the cover of Virginia Wildlife magazine. That's when Simmons' art career really took off. He built his reputation as a serious artist through Ducks Unlimited, a non-profit organization dedicated to wetlands conservation.

With his love for the organization and outdoors, he began painting wildlife scenes. As a still life artist, light, form and shadow play an important part in his work. Simmons' paintings are so lifelike that the viewer is tempted to reach out and touch the picture. Yet Simmons never enrolled in an art course until last January, when he signed up for drawing class.

"With this new course I'm trying to get looser," he explained. "I've always worked with real needle-thin brushes. Now I'm using these bigger, thicker brushes that you can't do that detail with. One of my instructors made me stand behind a yard stick some two feet away from the canvas — to paint with your arm rather than your hand. It's agonizing, but very satisfying."

And since starting this new course, Simmons' good-naturedly admits, "I've got a long way to go. The more you learn about something, you realize the less you know." Simmons, always an acrylic artist, is also exploring a new medium that's proving to be a challenge: oils.

"Acrylics take about 20 minutes to dry; oils take four to five days. Because they take longer, you tend to overwork them while they're still wet and muddy the colors. Oils are difficult, but have a higher bloom."

Through he's delving into new territory, Simmons is a respected painter. For the last four years he has been honored at the state level for his talent. Each year Ducks Unlimited invites artists from throughout Virginia to submit waterfowl-related paintings for its annual Sponsor Print competition. After a committee review, the best painting is selected and named the Sponsor Print for the state chapter of Ducks Unlimited. Simmons' work has received the top honor three times and second place once in the past four years.

He's proud that funds raised from the sale of his prints support Duck Unlimited's wetlands habitat programs, which now encompass more than seven million acres.

He good-naturedly laughs, though, that he may go "quackers" if he has to paint one more decoy.

Now that his reputation as an artist is firmly established, Simmons has patrons who commission him to paint local marshes and Outer Banks scenes. Some of his work even hangs in the lobbies of competing banks.

Simmons estimates he'll retire from the banking industry in about 10 years. He plans to pursue painting full-time after that.

Bring them your household messes

With spring cleaning fever in the air, you might wonder what to do with the used motor oil, old paint, leftover pool chemicals and other hazardous substances that have been collecting in your garage and garden shed. It's SPSSA to the rescue with the Household Hazardous Waste collection program.

Through the program, SPSSA safely disposes of materials such as antifreeze, fertilizers, fuels, herbicides, hobby supplies, household cleaners, insecticides, paint, pesticides, pool chemicals and used motor oil. Disposing of any of these products in the trash or down a drain can be extremely harmful to the environment. They can contaminate the water supply or seriously injure workers who handle the trash.

Residents of the eight communities served by SPSSA may bring their household hazardous waste to any one of the SPSSA-operated collection facilities for free disposal. All sites are open and staffed from 9 a.m. to noon on the days noted:

- Chesapeake Transfer Station, 901 Holliswell Lane, Chesapeake. Open first Wednesday and last two Saturdays.
- Isle of Wight Transfer Station, 3136 Woodland Ave., Norfolk. Open second Saturday and fourth Friday.
- Norfolk Transfer Station, 3136 Woodland Ave., Norfolk. Open second Saturday and fourth Friday.

- Refuse Derived Fuel Plant, 4 Victory Blvd., Portsmouth. Open second Wednesday and last Saturday.

- Franklin Transfer Station, State Route 671, Franklin. Open last Thursday.

- Landstown Transfer Station, 1925 Transfer Rd., Virginia Beach. Open third Wednesday.

- Oceana Transfer Station, 2025 Virginia Beach Blvd., Virginia Beach. Open first two Saturdays.

- Regional Landfill, 1 Bob Footler Dr., Suffolk. Open first Thursday.

SPSSA is the solid waste management agency for the cities of Chesapeake, Franklin, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Suffolk and Virginia Beach and the counties of Isle of Wight and Southampton. SPSSA operates the Portsmouth waste-to-energy plant, eight transfer stations, landfill operations, eight household hazardous waste collection facilities and numerous recycling programs.

VMSM presents new puppet show Saturday

Sneak previews of a new musical puppet show, "Wanda's Wide-eyed Wondrous Wetland Review," will be presented on Saturday at 1 and 3 p.m. as a continuation of the Virginia Marine Science Museum's Oyster Creek Family Fun Days.

This show, which features 40 new puppets and eight original songs, is a collaborative effort between the museum and Young Audiences of Virginia. Funding for the play was provided through a special grant by the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Fund.

Created by David Messick of Rainbow Puppet Productions, the show features bunraku, a Japanese-style of puppetry where puppeteers are completely visible while manipulating life-size puppets on stage.

Through song and dance the story revolves around a barred owl named Wanda who takes Seemore D. Bay, a seagull, on a tour through Oyster Creek Salt Marsh. Along the way they meet other characters such as Bert the Blue Heron, Big Moe the Toad and Dan the Drum Fish. By the end of his tour, Seemore and the audiences have a greater appreciation of the importance of our wetlands from both an environmental and economical perspective.

Not only is Saturday part of the museum's Oyster Creek Family Fun Days, but it is also the National Day of Puppetry making the debut of "Wanda's Wide-eyed Wondrous Wetland Review" a perfect tribute on this occasion.

This new musical puppet show is similar in style and message to "Chessie The Manatee" that debuted at the Virginia Marine Science Museum three years ago. It too was produced by David Messick in cooperation with museum staff and Young Audiences "Chessie The Manatee" continues to travel successfully throughout the state to schools and other special family events.

The Virginia Marine Science Museum is located at 717 General Booth Blvd. The museum is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

BEEN THERE, DONE THAT, GOT THE HARD HAT

Meyera Oberndorf has been a dedicated leader in shaping today's Virginia Beach. She has helped guide its growth from a small resort town to Virginia's largest city. Meyera has listened and then led, making our priorities hers and helping us to achieve them.

- ✓ OUTSTANDING PUBLIC EDUCATION
- ✓ SAFE STREETS
- ✓ GOOD ROADS
- ✓ CONTROLLED GROWTH
- ✓ ABUNDANT RECREATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES
- ✓ HIGH QUALITY OF LIFE
- ✓ CONVENIENT LIBRARIES
- ✓ CLEAN ENVIRONMENT
- ✓ OUR OWN WATER SUPPLY
- ✓ ECONOMIC AND TOURISM DEVELOPMENT

And we did it with a tax rate that is among the lowest in the Commonwealth of Virginia. In 2000, we have so much to celebrate, but Meyera's not through.

She's still listening and responding by launching Virginia Beach into the 21st Century with a visionary E-Government initiative that will improve communications between the people and their government while providing better citizen access to municipal services. And as chair of Southside Hampton Roads Mayors and Chairs and vice chair of the Hampton Roads Partnership, Meyera Oberndorf is leading the way toward more regional cooperation.

Vice mayor makes proposal

money for the Lynnhaven Boat Ramp and Beach Facility.

If the city accepts grant money, that is, from the Virginia Marine Resources Commission, which gets its money from a $6 fee from salt water fishermen, Hensley said the city would be prohibited from charging a fee.

The facility would include parking, boat ramps, restrooms and walkways to the beach at the Lesner Bridge/Crab Creek spoils site area.

Without the grant money (from the VMRC or the Department of Game and Inland Fisheries), the city would be about $288,000 short. Of the total estimated cost — $1.77 million — $670,521 is dependent upon the award of two state grants, from the VMRC and the Game and Inland Fisheries.

Frankenfield said that the city is not likely to receive the latter but that the department is committed to bring the project within what funds are available.

Mayor Meyera Oberdorf said that the voters have been patient. Ten years ago they were given a ray of hope.

Councilman Louis R. Jones asked whether the VMRC grant would prohibit charging for parking.

Frankenfield said that 115 parking spaces are provided for non-trailer parking and 97 for boats. He said that the residents of the Short Drive area support free parking. While anyone with a salt water fishing license will be excused from any parking fees, the city can charge for parking or for launching.

Hensley said that people would have to be hired to collect the fees, which would be difficult because people launching boats show up at any hour.

As to meters, Frankenfield said that there has been honor systems elsewhere that are successful.

The Parks and Recreation Department, in presenting its proposed operating budget, figures that it costs a nickel a day per resident to provide services. The performance measure is projected to remain constant at $21. With the current population estimate at 451,991, the net cost, after fees and charges revenue is deducted is $9,801,609, which equates roughly to a nickel per resident a day.

The total budget request is $2,557,832, an increase of $3,632 over the current budget.

The department, however, has proposed fee increases for fiscal 2000-01 as follows:

- After school elementary day care will be increased $5 to $25; after school middle school, $2 to $20; summer activity centers for elementary and middle schools, $5 to $45; therapeutic recreation summer activity center, $5 to $50 and therapeutic recreation summer youth activity centers and teen centers, $5 to $55.
- The $30 payment for the Golden Age Card would be made an annual payment from one-time — the regular adult card is $35.

The age for the Golden Age Card would be reduced from 65 to 60 years and any previously issued card will be grandfathered. Seniors meeting the income requirements will have the opportunity for a 50 percent fee waiver.

'Friends in Time' opens

"Friends in Time" will be presented by High Frequency Wave-lengths for three upcoming performances. Written by local author Mary Esterlund, the play was adapted for musical production by Marilyn Dantz with Glenda Palmer as musical director.

"Friends in Time" is a student production in which a boy from the 21st century travels to make friends in the 17th century. The young actors contrast their lives through song, dance and costume. The entire 21st century cast experiences life in Colonial Virginia from a child's view.

Three performances are slated: Saturday, May 13 at 11:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. and Sunday, May 14 at 2:30 p.m. at the Kempsville Playhouse (part of the Kempsville Community Recreation Center), 800 Monmouth Lane. Tickets are $7 adults; $5 students and seniors. Call 422-1240 for reservations.

May 27. Other events will follow for him to end his cape and crown.

By the time the Neptune Festival is over, Sutton will have already worked hard. He has a vision for the fest which he hopes will one day be fulfilled.

"When you think of New Orleans and fun, you think of Mardi Gras," he explained. "We want to get the Neptune Festival to that level."

With a goal of national, and even international name recognition for the festival, Sutton said sponsorships have doubled in five years. They may be doubled again in five to 10 years, he estimates the Neptune festival will be nationally known.

"This is the ideal way to showcase the city," he continued. "Virginia Beach is a great city. We have it all — good restaurants, quality of life, fishing, boating, the beach."

The Virginia Beach Neptune Festival 27th annual celebration is Sept. 1 through Oct. 1, culminating with Boardwalk Weekend at the oceanfront Sept. 29-Oct. 1.

No blowing this house down construction worker Curtis Overton of Norfolk's Nicholas and Company Construction. "I've had a bit of experience working with styrofoam and concrete with houses, so I decided to get involved with this."

"I haven't learned much about Habitat for Humanity, but I know it's a decent thing to give people that are underprivileged or poor a place to live. It's good for the community."

The concept for building these houses is unusual, to say the least.

First of all, in a concept termed the "Reward Wall System," an insulative foam block with a six-inch inner cell is filled with concrete. From the footing to the roof, the blocks are then assembled into hollow walls and aligned with shoring. The walls are then filled with already-mixed concrete that makes finishing, plumbing and wiring easy for workers.

"We've been here about three days," construction worker Walt Vandergrew of Resort Walls Systems of Hampton Roads said.

"We should be done by Friday, if it doesn't rain again. We've already had to extend this part of the construction for a day. Other crews will come then, and finish the rest of the house."

"The builder of this house wanted to try a concrete home, so my company volunteered to try and put it up. This is our first attempt at something like this, we weren't with them on their first one."

This concept was designed by the city of Virginia Beach's Project Impact, a program created by the Federal Management Agency to help local housing become more fire- and wind-resistant. The finished project will exhibit a 48-decibel noise reduction, extreme fire retardation, the ability to withstand winds of up to 200 miles an hour and a minimum life span of 50 years.

Beach inches upward in state health funds

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

Virginia Beach is moving up on the list of the amount localities receive per capita from the state for the operation of the city's health department — from 35 to 34.

Dr. Venita Newby-Owens, health department director, said at a City Council budget workshop Tuesday that the city was fortunate in having a bill passed by the General Assembly specifically for Virginia Beach giving the beach an additional $225,000 for each year of the biennium for mandatory and non-mandatory services.

At least, said Newby-Owens, the city is moving up and the funding may start a process.

City Manager James Spore said that every year the city includes a request for more funding for the health department in its legislative package.

"We're just about at the bottom of the heap," he noted.

Dr. Newby-Owens said that the formula for the allocation is one of the issues that should be looked at. She said that the formula was adopted 35 years ago and was never upgraded. As a result the faster growing localities suffer. The formula does not take into consideration growth, she said.

Robert Matthias, assistant to the city manager on legislative matters, said that Attorney General Mark Earley said that all localities will be treated equally in the future, except for Norfolk and Richmond, which will receive about the same amount they are now receiving.

Councilwoman Margaret Eure said the money should be put where the need is.

Matthias said that $10 million in additional funds was provided statewide, which isn't much.

Newby-Owens also said that the department is waiting for the consultant's report on a study of 115 localities, including Virginia Beach, which will make recommendations on Medicaid reimbursements.

Councilwoman Nancy Parker also asked about the department's policy on inspections. She said that in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg area, restaurants are ranked and the top five and lowest five are listed.

Newby-Owens said that North Carolina has a ranking system, but in Virginia, restaurants pass or fail. There is no ranking system. This policy has been debated ever since a television station has been doing a series on the subject.

She said she did not think that a ranking system would be an improvement overall.
